THE McFARLAND TRIAL.

An Unprecedented Forensic Display.

MR. GRAHAM'S ARGUMENT.

McFarland "Guilty of Murder or Nothing."

NO COMPROMISE VERDICT.

The Address Bristling With Legal Points.

Insanity the Sole Ground of Defense.

The Cole and the Sickles Cases Mostly Quoted From.

[illegible] day, when Mr. John Graham, senior counsel for the defense, commenced his argument to the jury on behalf of the prisoner. Few other great trials have occupied as much time, but in none has the interest felt been as intense as in this. The Sickles-Key case—from which frequent quotations were made yesterday—occupied a little more than four weeks in its trial, but it is doubtful if even it excited as much attention throughout the broad land as has that of the one now being concluded. Richardson was known all over the country, through the columns of the Tribune, by his initials, if in no other way, and when he fell by the hand of McFarland there was a universal desire to learn the circumstances of his shooting, and thereafter an undying interest attached to all proceedings in relation to it. If there had been a possibility of the question of interest, it would have been swallowed up by the darker, dense mystery—the "unholy triangle," as counsel has frequently characterized it—and the circumstances of the parties engaged therein stimulated public expectation, so that at the time of the commission of the deed had the popular mind been in such a state of apathy in regard to the transaction that it could not be awakened by even the most trivial allusion to the case. What wonder, therefore, that when McFarland was called upon to respond to the indictment, there should be a throng of interested parties eager to witness every step taken in the trial, and patiently wait day after day at the doors of the Court-room for an opportunity to listen to the evidence adduced in the case which might show that McFarland killed Richardson, but was irresponsible through insanity for the fatal act? The throngs who have besieged the doors of the trial chamber day by day have been, from the first, almost the same class of persons. Respectable people, beyond doubt, and men and women who have sacrificed time and comfort in order to take in with their ears every word that fell from the lips of counsel or witnesses regarding this case. These people have, any amount of crowding, and thought no privation too great which gave them the privilege of saying with truth that they had listened to the great McFarland trial.

The announcement in the Times of yesterday that Mr. John Graham would commence his address to the jury attracted to the Court-room a larger audience than has ever before been packed within its walls. Judges of other Courts forsook for the nonce their benches, and adjourning, hastened to the trial chamber wherein Mr. Graham was unwonted to speak. The Bench and the Bar almost without exception, made a grand holiday in order that they might listen to the eloquent words which were expected to flow from the lips of the "greatest criminal counsel of the present age." If legal minds could be so excited, what wonder that the public, from the laymen? Capt. McClellan, the efficient officer in charge of the Court, was desirous of providing all who came with seats, but found it impossible, for long before the hour for opening, the Court-room was filled to overflowing. The ladies were out in full force, and among them were notices Mrs. Colburn and several of her friends who have apparently stood by her through the trial. Among the dignitaries of the other sex were Dr. Ayer, one of the Tribune stockholders, and, as appears in evidence, the employer of Ex-Judge Davis; Judge Bingham, who will ever be famous as the prosecutor of the impeachment charges against President Johnson; Judge Brady, and others, and several prominent clergymen.

The Court opened promptly at 11 o'clock, but, owing to the crush, it was several minutes before Mr. Graham could gain access to the room. He came loaded down with a pile of briefs, was welcomed by his associate, Mr. Gerry, and sat down for a moment. Meanwhile the District-Attorney and Mr. Davis were observed holding a conference with the Recorder, and at its conclusion Mr. Davis left the Court-room and did not again return—this ending his connection with the case, as was intimated he would in the Times of yesterday. McFarland and Percy were present in Court at an early hour, and the little fellow seemed throughout the day to feel that the great crisis in his father's trial was near at hand. He remained quietly seated by his father during the whole day. The ladies were greatly incommoded, the gentlemen apparently considering that a Court-room was no place for women, and not having in view the prospective terrors of the Sixteenth Amendment, resolutely refused to give up their dearly-bought seats to even the dearest of the dear ones who had thrust themselves forward into notoriety at this juncture. Consequently many of the ladies had to stand. During the day's proceedings one of the ladies, a little bolder than her sisters, seemingly resolved to obtain even an apology for a seat, climbed upon the sill of one of the windows, and there maintained an uncomfortable position until a gentleman surrendered his chair.

Mr. Graham commenced his address to the jury at 11:10, spoke till the recess, at 1:30, resumed his argument at 2:05, and concluded the law points at 3¼—making three hours and forty-five minutes during which he was continually speaking. His exordium occupied about twenty minutes in the delivery, and then, after thanking the Court and the jury for the patient manner in which they had discharged their duty, and referring to three cases in which he had been previously called upon to defend the sanctity of the marriage tie, he entered upon the facts with which he wished to impress the jury. Mr. Graham made a brief reference to Mr. Davis, as the private counsel in the case, and said that if he had now withdrawn from it, it would be unnecessary in him (Mr. Graham) to make more than a passing allusion to his connection with it, and that only to show that the prosecution had been aided by private malice against the prisoner. Mr. Graham alluded to the course which the prosecution had seen fit to adopt in the selection of the jury, in excluding three competent men for no other reason than that they were of the same nationality as the prisoner; and then cited incidents which had taken place in the progress of the trial, showing that the prosecution was instigated by a malice which were already so deeply hostility to the accused.

In commencing his exception of the general principles of law which he claimed governed the case, Mr. Graham made the bold declaration that McFarland was guilty of murder or of nothing—there could be no compromise verdict in this case. The prosecution were bound to make good the charge as set forth in the indictment, such as willful murder, or they must accept a verdict of acquittal. McFarland killed Richardson—that was admitted—but he killed him while he was laboring under such a condition of mind as rendered him irresponsible for the act, and the law said that the man who committed a crime while he was in a state of insanity must be adjudged guilty. The jury must weigh the evidence on this point well, and if they were satisfied that the prisoner was insane on the day and at the moment of committing the deed, he must be acquitted entirely; and if there was any doubt entertained in their minds on this point, they must give the prisoner the benefit of that doubt. The prosecution could not offer to the Court, in mitigation, of a verdict and accept such a verdict of manslaughter, if the prisoner was responsible at all in the premises, for the highest crime known to the law. Mr. Graham then argued that it was a well-established fact that a man might be insane on a single idea, and yet be sane on all other subjects. Insanity, as it has been held, was no respecter of persons, it was no respecter of persons, it was no respecter of persons, it lying upon a table; but if a man becomes insane he will take the watch, his moral sense being impaired. And, if he becomes so deranged as to set no more value on the life of a man than on that of a brute, he will kill him. In charging the jury in the case above referred to, Lord Denman said:

"The question is whether the prisoner was labouring under that species of insanity which satisfies you that he was quite unaware of the nature, character and consequences of the act which he was committing, or, in other words, whether he was under the influence of a diseased mind and was really unconscious at the time that he was committing the act that it was a crime."

This case certainly recognizes the doctrine of moral insanity and repudiates the principle of sanity being held to be solely a knowledge of good and evil in the abstract.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF INSANENESS.

Whether insanity is general or partial, the standard of irresponsibility is, did the act proceed from or issue out of it? Did insanity vent itself in the particular act?

The intellect may be sound, and the emotions unsound, and the moral then sides with an unsound emotion. The intellect reasons and emotion springs up corresponding with the reasoning of the intellect.

Lord Hale's narrow doctrine was first subverted in the Hadfield case; and Oxford's case added to insanity the departments of moral and partial insanity, so that in England the law, insanity as a defense was arrangeable as follows:

1. Total intellectual insanity.
2. Partial intellectual insanity.
3. Total moral insanity.
4. Partial moral insanity.

Any person can tell when another man is insane in his passions or emotions, but not always when he is intellectually insane. If we should see a man rushing at a locomotive we would know that he was insane, though to him that locomotive might be transformed into something imaginary and impalpable as the air through which he could run with perfect impunity. That would be intellectual insanity, very different from emotional insanity alone; but you will find that there is a distinction clearly drawn between the two, and hence Lord Denman's remark that "the question is whether the prisoner was laboring under that species of insanity which satisfies you that he was quite unaware of the nature, character and consequences of the act he was committing, or, in other words, whether he was under the influence of a diseased mind and was really unconscious at the time that he was committing the act that it was a crime."

THE CASE OF HATFIELD.

I desire now to refer to the Hadfield case for the purpose of showing you how deliberate an insane man may be. Hadfield was indicted for shooting at George III. at Drury-Lane theater. In England the trials of the Kings of Europe have been accomplished within this century, and in such cases insanity was recognized and admitted. Now, we all know that whatever difference there may be in the loyalty of an Englishman to his Government, he is tenacious of his affection for his sovereign, and all Englishmen are anxious and often have been when the life of the sovereign is interfered with. Yet, in this case where the feelings and prejudices must have increased the horror of the crime, Hadfield was acquitted upon the simple ground of insanity. Hadfield armed himself with a pistol, entered the theater, and stood there thirty or forty minutes, apparently as sane as any man in it, and when the King stepped forward to the front of the box to make his acknowledgments to his subjects as they were cheering him, Hadfield stood up, took deliberate aim, fired several shots at the King. He was arrested, tried, and acquitted upon the ground of insanity. So that in England the highest scope is given to this plea, even where the Sovereign is concerned, and the defense of insanity always prevails there in proper cases. I claim that as far back as 1840 the defense of total intellectual insanity or of partial intellectual insanity, of total moral insanity or of partial moral insanity, was fully recognized as a ground of exclusion of conviction of crime.

In 1840, the Judges of England did endeavor to narrow that law in the case of Norton, who meant to kill Sir Robert Peel, but killed his deputy instead; but the law of England in 1840 is still the law of that country, and it is that a man is not responsible for any act committed while totally or partially it was, mentally or physically.

THE LAW OF INSANITY IN THIS STATE.

Now I propose to devote a few words to the law of insanity in this State and county. It rests upon a provision of the statutes, and your Honor will find it in the third revised editions. These provisions are that:

"Neither does by a person in a state of insanity can be tried, sentenced to any punishment or punished for any crime while he continues in that state."

In saying that an act done in a state of insanity cannot be punished as an offense, the Legislature does not mean that the act can be prosecuted to a conviction and that there proceedings must stop; they meant that as all criminal proceedings were designed to land in punishment, no proceeding, whatever must result in a conviction when the act was done in a state of insanity. In other words, on a trial the jury must acquit. If the act was not liable to punishment he was not liable to conviction. Insanity being thus established as an absolute bar to a criminal prosecution by statute, which is forbidden to punish any crime or offense committed while in that state, it is immaterial how long the insanity existed before or after the commission of the act, it is enough that it existed at the time of its commission.

CRIMINAL INTENT.

This principle is consistent with other legal rules. In murder, an intent to slay, perfectly formed on the instant, constitutes the crime, under the statutes of this State, as now construed and applied by our Courts.

Why not the analogy hold good in reference to irresponsibility for crime? If a second can make murder, why cannot an instant of time create insanity?

The law which says: "If a man conceives a murderous intent on the spot he shall go to the gallows," that law should also recognize that if his mind is wiped out on the spot, he at that instant of time becomes irresponsible. If the Devil will tempt a man to murder, if man's heart and hands turn to commit an act that carries him to the gallows, why, if a visitation of the Deity wipes out his mind, is not that a good reason for recognizing his irresponsibility. Now, there is another principle in the common law of the land, which is the greatest system of human wisdom ever given, but to the world, that common law does not excuse a man who makes himself drunk to slay his neighbor. The law recognizes no right in him to act on his immorality against his criminality; but if his neighbor makes him drunk by force or contrivance, and he should commit a crime while in that state of intoxication, the principle would not apply. In the first case it is self-imposed madness, and in the second it is a forced or compelled madness.

WHERE THE RESPONSIBILITY LIES.

Does not this analogy hold good here? Who made this man drunk? Richardson, and he slew him; and how can it be claimed that this man is to pay for the deed which Richardson instigated, the forfeit of his own life. That which makes man's mouth and disconnects his brain is as nothing to that which goes into a man's mind and maddens the intellect. We reduced this prisoner to a condition in which he was bereft of consciousness and will! Who mixed the contents of, and compelled him to drink the bitter cup from which he drank for you? Was it not this which caused his derangement?

The man who lays a slow match to the happiness of his neighbor and maddens and frenzies him, ought to be compelled to take the consequences of what he thus brings about. The prisoner was the victim, not the cause of his frenzy.

I want this Court and jury to remember that this man did not madden himself, but was maddened by the combination unveiled and exhibited by the evidence before this Court. Now I desire in this connection to refer to a case in view of this Court, and of this city. In that case the defense was set up by my own brother, who offered in the case no medical evidence of insanity. The case I refer to is that of The People vs. Amelia Norman.

CASE OF AMELIA NORMAN.

The prisoner was indicted in this Court for an assault with an intent to kill. She had been led astray by a man, who deserted her after he had ruined her, and appeared determined to turn her over to a fate almost inevitably awaiting a fallen woman. She was willing to give him up, but wanted some assurance from him to wear her in respectable life. He refused her this, although she tried to soften him in every way.

She surrendered herself to absolute despair; and in a moment of frenzy, as he was entering a public hotel in this City, first consulted to kill him in silence and secrecy, and then, unnoticeable, plunged a knife in him, almost taking his life. This was the act for which she was indicted, and the trial took place at the January term of this Court, 1844. After a trial of four days she was acquitted, and when the verdict was rendered the welkin rang with the cheers of the spectators, loud enough to be heard blocks off from the Court-room.

She was taken in hand by a celebrated authoress, who heard of her wrongs and stood by her until she passed through that ordeal. There was no medical evidence as to the condition of her mind when she committed the act, but as in the Hickles case, the jury were left to tell what it was from their own knowledge of human nature. The Recorder, in his charge to the jury, made use of this remark, as reported in one of the newspapers of the day, referring to the defense of insanity which had been set up. "That the law's rule for the government of the minds of the jury was their own common-sense views of the case, meaning that was the correct mode of passing upon the case under the legal instructions received from the Court.

A STATE OF FRENZY.

We did not call any evidence of insanity in the case of Daniel Sickles, because we thought it unnecessary, after he slew the seducer of his wife as he stood wasting his heartstrings with adulterous caresses at the door of her home. We went to the jury upon the common sense of the matter. We knew that no man could do anything else than consider such provocation like that.

You do not want any doctor to tell you how you would feel if, on returning home, you found your home desolate, hearing its inmates beneath its ruins. How much more harrowing the ruin when, instead of the material household, it is the moral household that falls; how much greater the calamity. In this case of Amelia Norman the Recorder left it to the jury, of men of common sense, to say whether, when she found her seducer, was immovable in his determination to effect her final ruin, whether he had not himself driven that moment of insanity in which she plunted her knife into his breast. I would now refer to the case of The People vs. Klein, and here, again, I desire to express my thanks to Judge Edmonds for the great interest he has taken in this case. The case is the first evidence part II, (select cases.)

AN EXTREME CASE.

This prisoner was tried in the Oyer and Terminer in this county for March, 1846. He was indicted for a most barbarous homicide, in setting fire to the building in which the wife of a woman he resided, and forcibly detaining her therein, of the same time suffocating wounds upon her, with a knife, of which the woman whom she was suffocated and injured so as to cause her death. The trial commenced before Judge Edmonds and two Aldermen, and resulted in his acquittal on the ground of insanity. The testimony appeared to be uncontroverted. It showed that the family of Klein had introduced into a quiet family established as a part of the fabric of society of this State. The charge of the Judge to the jury was as remarkably accurate, comprehensive and clear language and we make it a matter of one place to copy it. "If some controlling power within him which he could not resist, or if he had not a sufficient use of his reason to control the passions which prompted the act complained of, he is not responsible." In another part of his charge he said: "And it must be in your minds that the moral as well as the intellectual faculties may be so affected by the disease as to deprive the mind of its controlling and directing power."

WHAT IS A CRIME.

In order to constitute a crime a man must have memory and intelligence to know that the act he is about to commit is wrong, to remember that if he commits the act, he will be subject to punishment, and he must have reason and will to enable him to compare and choose between the supposed advantage or satisfaction to be obtained by the criminal act and the immunity from punishment which he will secure by obtaining from it. If, on the other hand, he have not intelligence and capacity to have criminal intent and purpose, and if his moral and intellectual powers are so deficient that he has not sufficient will, or controlling mental power; or if, through the overwhelming violence of mental disease his intellectual power is for the time obliterated, he is not a responsible moral agent, and is not punishable for criminal acts.

THE TEST OF MORAL INSANITY.

And, if your Honor will do me the favor on this subject, you will find that the doctors are right in saying that the test of intellectual insanity is absurd when applied to the perceptions, emotions or voluntary insanity. Your Honor will be kind enough to observe this, and I hope that here we will have some power on the law of insanity which we had in Judge Edmonds. He was the first Judge who planted this doctrine of moral insanity in this State, and he did it because when the right and wrong of it was discovered, for if had not been clearly understood, and it was ascertained that the perceptions, emotions and the will could be diseased as distinct from the intellect. You will find that the putting this right and wrong test to the jury nowadays is like asking a man if his shoe he wore in his cradle. That principle was made for humanity in its infancy; it has now reached the maturity of manhood of the discovery and development of science. Why, then, when there are three different orders of insanity in that test to be applied to a species of insanity in reference to which it is claimed that it is irrational to apply it? He uses this language: "And it must be borne in mind that the moral, as well as the intellectual faculties may be so disordered by disease as to deprive the mind of its controlling power."

CHIEF-JUSTICE SHAW'S OPINION.

Here is the opinion of Chief-Justice Shaw in relation to the subject: "In order, then, to constitute a crime, a man must have memory and intelligence enough to know that the act he is about to commit is wrong, to remember and understand that if he commits that act he will be subject to punishment, should know and will to enable him to compare and choose, and to secure the advantage or gratification, to be a criminal act, and the immunity from punishment which he will secure by abstaining from it." And he must have all those requisites of mind at the time he shoots, if that is the act which is charged upon him, to be able to remember his relations to his fellow-creatures, and to understand them. He must be able to reason on the consequence of his doing or not doing a particular act, and he must have the power of volition, which is the soul and animating principle of all criminal action. Upon any other principle than that, you may hang up a case such as my day in the week. If, on the other hand," says the same authority, "he has intelligence and capacity to have criminal intent and purpose, and if his moral and intellectual powers are so deficient that he has not sufficient will or controlling mental power; or if, through mental disease, his intellectual power is, for a time, obliterated, he is not a responsible moral agent, and is not punishable for criminal acts."

THE CASE OF FREEMAN.

I desire now, your Honor, to call attention to the case of The People vs. Freeman. This prisoner was sent to the State Prison at Auburn for horse stealing. He was partially insane, and on his liberation, after five years' imprisonment, he instituted several such assaults individually to obtain money. Not one assault was made on the person of any female. Not one attempt to kill. He was convicted that he was a menace to life and accordingly he was with the family of a Mr. Donnelly, who resided about four miles from Auburn. He killed four persons in that family and wounded one. He was indicted at the sitting Court of Oyer and Terminer, and at the same time he was tried for his crimes, as they were believed, he pleaded his conviction of a former conclusion. He was tried in July, 1845, and convicted of murder. He was defended, as a matter of charity, by Hon. Wm. H. Seward, Ex-Secretary of State. Many will remember the little fable falling against the prisoner and pleaded Mr. Seward also for engaging in his defense.

THE PREJUDICE OF COLOR.

He was a negro, and his victims were white. The defense was that he was an idiot or insane. The case was carried up on a writ of error, where the judgment was reversed; but pending a new trial in August, 1847, the prisoner died. On an examination of his brain, although the doctor's testified he was an idiot, it was stated it was diseased, which clearly shows that the condition of the brain is not to be reached while the man is alive; and it is also proved that this man was unaccountable for the commission of this act. An honest jury had mistakenly pronounced him sane, relying in strength of feeling against him on account of his color. Judge Hogeboom holds that the act of a man in a state of insanity can be punished, as an offense; but he also refers to the state of insanity in reference to which such an act renders him amenable. He makes condemns the submission of the test of right and wrong in the abstract. Your Honor will perceive that the test of right and wrong in the abstract. He rather condemns this submission, and says that the insanity must be such as to deprive the party charged with crime of the use of reason in regard to the act done. Partial insanity, where it covers the act done, is not an excuse. If this is a jurist, who claims the party irresponsible for an insane act. He illustrates this by showing that a man partially deranged does not necessarily commit an insane act, though his act may be beyond the scope of his insanity. He says: "The act, in my judgment, must be an insane act, and not the act of an insane man, to insure his acquittal." You will perceive how that, principle is applicable to the case; for, if the jury believe that the shooting of Richardson by McFarland, on the afternoon of the 27th of November, 1859, was an insane act, in the light of the prisoner is irresponsible, and it does not necessarily follow that, because he was insane on some subjects, he was insane with reference to this particular act, although if he was insane as to this act and sane on other subjects, that would not deprive him of his right to irresponsibility.

THE COLE-HIGGOCK CASE.

I now refer your Honor to the case of Cole, who was tried at Albany in 1868. On the first trial, before Justice Ingraham, the jury disagreed, but on the second trial they acquitted him. I cite the authority of Judge Hogeboom in this case. Your Honor will remember that Cole was indicted for the homicide of Hiscox, member of the Assembly of this State. Hiscox destroyed the wife of Cole, who was an officer in the army of the United States. Cole was a man of character, and before he met Hiscox at Stanwix Hall his wife had communicated to him the fact of her dishonor. He met him, and drawing a pistol shot him, and the question was whether the presence of Hiscox rendered him irresponsible for his act at the time he shot him, whether the recollection of the presence of Hiscox upon his mind was such as to frenzy him, and to render him unaccountable for what he did. Justice Hogeboom refers to the facts in the case thus: "The allegations, or the fact of adulterous, that his wife made to the prisoner did not prove his (Hiscox's) adultery. The indictment was presented, not as furnishing evidence of the facts themselves, but as communications made to the husband which were calculated more or less to operate on his mind and influence his conduct, and to enable you, in the light of subsequent events, to judge how far they did so operate, and to determine to what extent the knowledge or information of those facts was calculated to explain and to mitigate the homicide unfortunately committed." Again, he says: "In this case the admitted, if admitted he was, was not deceived by the husband in the commission of the crime, but under circumstances, so far as the evidence discloses, which show that it was recently perpetrated. The period of adultery was long since passed; the knowledge of its commission had been communicated to the prisoner at least two or three days before, and a sufficient time in the interest of the law had elapsed for him to sue for or remain her away as to forbid individual vengeance, and to pronounce the act of premeditated killing a crime of murder. True it is, however, it, notwithstanding the lapse of time, the crushing weight of this domestic tragedy had driven the prisoner's mind to absolute distraction, and overthrown the reason of the husband, he is permitted to find an [illegible] from punishment in mental alienation."

[illegible] that if it is not [illegible] the act [illegible] the act [illegible] with Richardson [illegible] in this case, but that he was practically maddened by the fact that they still had possession of one of his sons; and if they carried out their programme in reference to that son, they would transfer him from his natural to his artificial parent. Richardson, they would remove from him the name of his natural father, and put upon his head the name of a father chosen by his wife. It was the distraction arising upon the inability to discover whether they could not also place his reason beyond his reach, which actuated and reanimated these previous crimes, and gave them a freshness as though they had just occurred, notwithstanding they had occurred two or three years before. Now, Justice Hogeboom asserts that the act of his prisoner was insane at the time of the shooting, or insane enough to be brought into a state of frenzy, and which, after I read some passages from the report, I will read to your Honor.

THE LANGUAGE OF MR. BRADY.

Mr. Brady—whose name can never be mentioned by any one without the most melancholy recollections that we ever can feel, nor without the most pleasurable recollections that he ever should have existed—uses this language: "Grief, remorse and shame had long preyed upon the prisoner. I desire to say, in behalf of the prisoner, that, in the judgment of his counsel, there is no rational or possible view by which the offense can be demonstrated manslaughter, and that the only ground for declining to accept the offer of that sympathy that would induce a verdict for the lesser offense, and would rather die than be sent to the State Prison." In reference to that part of the charge where the Judge intimated to the jury that if they could let them return a verdict of man-slaughter, he thus argued: "Shall we, in the last moments of life, do this, he said it was his experience that where insanity culminated in an act like this, it was the result of wrongs committed upon them; and, strange as it may appear, if their insanity remained, they would not be guilty of the offense, in the absence of the individual wrongs, in the absence of the individual wrongs, in the absence of that condition, was produced, they were just as sane as they were rational, and that was one of the characteristics of a certain species of mental derangement. When a disease supervened, that is what corresponded to the description where, in the dying moments, the death of the person he had wronged, the individual who was laboring from the disease, though on a particular subject he was insane, nevertheless, for every other purpose, was to be taken as perfectly sane. Justice Hogeboom also says that the prisoner was to be tried, and I have seen, I regret to be the case, [illegible] "If the defendant was deprived of his reason at the time of the act, then he is not responsible." Justice Hogeboom says that when a person's faculties are for a time unsettled, and insanity enthroned in their place, he is not responsible for his acts.

MORALLY INSANE.

In the case of The People vs. White, an able authority defined the law thus: "If a prisoner killed a person while in such a state of mind as to know that the deed was morally wrong, he was responsible." Let it be understood—"morally wrong," for upon a proper interpretation of that term depended an important issue in this case. For instance, it is wrong to disobey a corporation ordinance forbidding the putting of ashes on the sidewalk, but there is nothing in the violation of that law to indicate that the man may be insane. But what is that word "morally wrong?" To put that to test to the jury as the ability of a man to be able to distinguish between right and wrong from his disobedience of a corporation ordinance is not the way to test his sanity. He who can distinguish between right and wrong without being insane can be convicted. The jury might have said that if the prisoner knew he killed the deceased was in such a state of mind as to know the deed was unlawful, yet, under certain circumstances, he may be so carried away by unpardonable feelings, such as produced insanity in the mind of the prisoner as to be wholly irresponsible for his actions. I will now refer your Honor to an authority which has received the learned prosecuting officer, which recognizes the very issues of insanity that Dr. Hammond set forth in his elaborate testimony, in Wagner on The Purple, in the 24 of Hayes, 324, you will perceive we have the fact of frenzy.

AN OPINION OF RECORDER HOFFMAN.

Wagner was tried in this Court, and Recorder Hoffman, our present distinguished Governor, presided on that trial. In his charge to the jury he delivered the following singularly able instructions: "Every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his acts. When a question of insanity is presented on the evidence, the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of any doubt which arises on the question; that is, the jury must be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that he was insane when he committed the act." It recognizes the principle of McCaar, which cannot be departed from. If the counsel for the prisoner come to work and introduce any evidence at all which establishes insanity, then that insanity becomes cause of the whole [illegible] of it is not [illegible] and [illegible] crime on [illegible] the [illegible] prisoner [illegible] the [illegible] prisoner [illegible] the [illegible] prisoner [illegible] quested to charge you that if the prisoner committed the act in a moment of frenzy, he cannot be convicted of murder in the first degree; I not only charge that proposition; but if his mind was in that condition, he cannot be convicted of any crime. Now the learned District-Attorney has overlooked that point. Chief-Justice Hunt, while he concurred in the decision of Mr. Justice Clerke that decision, and every Judge of the Court of Appeals, seems to be unanimous, say that if a man commits an act in a moment of frenzy, he cannot be convicted of any crime known to the law. Now, here is as high an authority, not only on account of its name as a citizen, but the Court of Appeals, but on account of its being cited in the Courts of this State. In the case of Freeman, decided in March, 1866, (Wagner's case was decided in June, 1866, the following term,) your Honor will perceive this law has been strictly observed.

HARTRANFT'S LAW.

I desire, now, for a few minutes, to refer to a case which occurred in Pennsylvania, and can willing this jury shall adjudge whether by Massachusetts law. There is no State in the Union more tainted with Puritanism than that, and if this prisoner can be acquitted under the law of that State, he is entitled to be acquitted under the law of this State. Your Honor will perceive that the expounded principles of Chief-Justice Shaw there throw the shielding and protecting arm around this man, and relieve him from the destiny which is sought to be visited upon him. A prisoner was confined in the State Prison in Massachusetts, to which he was sentenced on two occasions for different terms, and at the time of the alleged offense was in the last six months of his imprisonment. He did not appear to have a good record while in the prison. He was indicted for murder in killing the Warden of the prison on the 15th of June, 1861. On a dark and stormy night the prisoner had secured their acquittal on the ground of insanity. He was then sent to the State Asylum, and four months later he escaped from a window forty feet from the ground, and died from the injuries he received.

A CASE OF MELANCHOLIA.

Some days before the killing he appeared to be in an unusual state of mind. He said he heard from the prisoners that the Warden was going to keep him in solitary confinement, and that he and others were conspiring against the life of the Warden. He stated that he heard voices in the air, and that he had a knife, which he had secreted, by his bed at night; that they were giving him chloroform in his food; but on all other subjects expressed no fear, and was perfectly rational. A clear case of partial insanity of a species of that mentioned by Hammond, Wagner and Hayes, namely, as distinct from intellectual insanity. They were virtually instructed that to make the private accountable for his homicides he must have memory to remember his relations to his community and their rights to him; he must have intelligence to know and understand that his act will inflict pain and misery upon the [illegible] of the Deity, and he must have those who he committed the act. Chief-Justice Shaw there says: "Intellect has memory. It has understanding, and he must have intelligence to know and understand that if he does that any act, he will be subject to punishment." Justice Hogeboom says that the jury which will consider to the mind memory and understanding and at the same time say that he is deprived of control over his will, he is accountable for what he did. What is this case of Wagner? What is Freeman? It is that condition of the mind which is produced by the effect of the previous physical disease, or leaves behind it the trace of existing physical disease, is an operation of the mind produced by mental cause so and does so that which may constitute in the mind of a man freedom which prompt him to the commission of crime.

WHAT WILL PRODUCE INSANITY.

If your Honor please, if a man seeks a modesty insulting his little daughter, and were suddenly stung by a sudden frenzy, though it might not be scientific insanity, I assert that there would be no necessity in such a case to show that previous insanity existed, although in this case we show that it did exist. If a man should see his little daughter insulted in his presence, and if sudden madness should cause him to slay the monster who frustrated her virtuous emotions, McFarland was rational, as he controlled himself, but that retributive justice which has prescribed the fate of adulterers directed this man Richardson on that occasion into contact with the prisoner at the time when the sudden madness of the prisoner was produced him an involuntary instrument for the execution of Divine or Heavenly vengeance. I mean to argue that he did not commit to see the deceased when he entered that office; but at the sudden appearance of the destroyer of his domestic peace, the destroyer of his great wrongs, maddened with overwhelming emotions, and placed him under the influence of that rapid and irresistible frenzy in which he committed the act. Justice Hogeboom says that when a person's faculties are for a time unsettled, and insanity enthroned in their place, he is not responsible for his acts.

MORALLY INSANE.

In the case of The People vs. White, an able authority defined the law thus: "If a prisoner killed a person while in such a state of mind as to know that the deed was morally wrong, he was responsible." Let it be understood—"morally wrong," for upon a proper interpretation of that term depended an important issue in this case. For instance, it is wrong to disobey a corporation ordinance forbidding the putting of ashes on the sidewalk, but there is nothing in the violation of that law to indicate that the man may be insane. But what is that word "morally wrong?" To put that to test to the jury as the ability of a man to be able to distinguish between right and wrong from his disobedience of a corporation ordinance is not the way to test his sanity. He who can distinguish between right and wrong without being insane can be convicted. The jury might have said that if the prisoner knew he killed the deceased was in such a state of mind as to know the deed was unlawful, yet, under certain circumstances, he may be so carried away by unpardonable feelings, such as produced insanity in the mind of the prisoner as to be wholly irresponsible for his actions. I will now refer your Honor to an authority which has received the learned prosecuting officer, which recognizes the very issues of insanity that Dr. Hammond set forth in his elaborate testimony, in Wagner on The Purple, in the 24 of Hayes, 324, you will perceive we have the fact of frenzy.

AN OPINION OF RECORDER HOFFMAN.

Wagner was tried in this Court, and Recorder Hoffman, our present distinguished Governor, presided on that trial. In his charge to the jury he delivered the following singularly able instructions: "Every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his acts. When a question of insanity is presented on the evidence, the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of any doubt which arises on the question; that is, the jury must be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that he was insane when he committed the act." It recognizes the principle of McCaar, which cannot be departed from. If the counsel for the prisoner come to work and introduce any evidence at all which establishes insanity, then that insanity becomes cause of the whole [illegible] of it is not [illegible] and [illegible] crime on [illegible] the [illegible] prisoner [illegible] the [illegible] prisoner [illegible] quested to charge you that if the prisoner committed the act in a moment of frenzy, he cannot be convicted of murder in the first degree; I not only charge that proposition; but if his mind was in that condition, he cannot be convicted of any crime. Now the learned District-Attorney has overlooked that point. Chief-Justice Hunt, while he concurred in the decision of Mr. Justice Clerke in that decision, and every Judge of the Court of Appeals, seems to be unanimous, say that if a man commits an act in a moment of frenzy, he cannot be convicted of any crime known to the law. Now, here is as high an authority, not only on account of its name as a citizen, but the Court of Appeals, but on account of its being cited in the Courts of this State. In the case of Freeman, decided in March, 1866, (Wagner's case was decided in June, 1866, the following term,) your Honor will perceive this law has been strictly observed.

HARTRANFT'S LAW.

I desire, now, for a few minutes, to refer to a case which occurred in Pennsylvania, and can willing this jury shall adjudge whether by Massachusetts law. There is no State in the Union more tainted with Puritanism than that, and if this prisoner can be acquitted under the law of that State, he is entitled to be acquitted under the law of this State. The Steamer Siberia Puts Back With a Broken Shaft—All Well on Board—Death of a Member of the Firm of Cunard & Co.

GLASGOW, May 6.—The steamer India, which arrived in the Clyde from New-York today, reports that she spoke the steamer Siberia, which sailed from Liverpool April 29 for Boston, heading east. The Siberia has broken her shaft, and was on her way back to Queenstown. She needed no assistance.

BOSTON, May 6.—The Cunard steam-ship Siberia, from Liverpool for Boston, which is some days overdue, was spoken on the 30th of April with her shaft broken, being then 1,200 miles west of Ireland. She was putting back for Queenstown under sail. Mr. HORATIO CURTIS, a passenger on board, was transferred to the steamer Indiana, the vessel which spoke her, and arrived at Queenstown last night. He reports the passengers all well.

LONDON, May 6.—EDMUND ANTROBUS, senior partner of the firm of CUNARD, is dead.

Precautions to Preserve Order on Sunday in Paris—The Great Plot—What the Tuileries Correspondent has to Say—The French Bishops and the Plebiscitum.

PARIS, May 6.—There was a conference yesterday at the Tuileries, at which MM. OLLIVIER, CHEVANDIER, PIETRI, LEGRAND and the Minister of the Interior were present. The design of the conference was to agree upon the precautions necessary to be taken to preserve public order on Sunday next, the day of the voting. Meanwhile the Police and other local authorities are making all preparations possible in furtherance of the same end. Arrests of persons suspected of complicity in the regicide plot continue to be made. The Marseillaise (Henri ROCHEFORT's journal) was seized by the authorities today on account of the violence of its articles on political affairs. The edition of the Rappel was seized today by the Police. Trouble is reported at Lyons, where the authorities have interrupted the publication of the Cloche (newspaper)....The Gaulois (ministerial organ) says that the opposition party has sent committees to London and Brussels to ascertain the real truth of the alleged conspiracy. Mr. SHALLEY, of the New-York Tribune is here, and announces his readiness to answer all questions, though the authorities have as yet given him no occasion. He says he is acquainted with FLOURENS; he met him in London, and received letters for him, but knew nothing of their contents; and declares that he had no knowledge of FLOURENS being in any way connected with the conspiracy.

LONDON, May 6.—The Pall Mall Gazette, in behalf of Mr. GEO. W. SHALLEY, states on authority that he was ignorant of the alleged conspiracy, and of the contents of the letters sent to GUSTAVE FLOURENS in his care. The Times continued, editorially, to belittle the French conspiracy. It says, to-day, the real loss is the strength of those who would infer from it the weakness of those who would resist the conspiracy.

ROME, May 6.—Two-thirds of the French Bishops and priests now in Rome have requested permission to vote at the French Embassy on the plebiscitum. The Marquis of RAVINYRAN thanks them for their patriotism, but is instructed to reply that the law does not permit such a step.

Another Manifesto from the "Left"—The Plot Represented as a Political Trick.

PARIS, May 6.—The joint Committee of Deputies of the "Left" and representatives of the Democratic Press have issued another manifesto to electors. They protest against the trickery of the Government in publishing on the eve of an election violent and ill-considered reports for the purpose of creating a panic. They denounce the Government for charging all its opponents with insurrection and assassination, and for endeavoring to create the impression that France has escaped a great danger. The Committee say they despise these calumnies. France knows on which side are the men of violence, she knows who got power by the coup d'état, and who reserve the right of the coup d'état.

Spanish Politics—Serrano and the Regency—Retractory Bishops—The German Tariff—The French in Algiers.

MADRID, May 6.—Señor OLOZAGA has arrived from Paris. It is now rumored that Marshal SERRANO will not resign, but will be invested with the full powers of a Royal Regent. Thirty-eight Spanish Bishops announce from Rome their refusal to take the oath of the new Constitution of Spain, although the Pope interposes no objection.

BERLIN, May 6.—The Parliament of the Zollverein, having increased the duty on cotton, have reduced that on pig-iron to two and a half silver groschen per quintal, and that on rice to fifteen. The duty on cotton yarn is retained.

PARIS, May 6.—Gen. DE WIMPFEN reports to the War Department from Oran that the tribes of Algeria, which recently revolted, have submitted to French rule again. Two sharp engagements were had with the rebels on Sunday, the 3d, in both of which the French were successful.

British Parliament—The Greek Correspondence—The Red River Expedition Abandoned.

LONDON, May 6.—The House of Lords today was engaged on business of purely local interest. In the House of Commons, Mr. ORWAY submitted another installment of the correspondence with the Greek Government on the recent massacre. Mr. STANSFIELD, Secretary to the Treasury, stated that £7,000,000 paid for the telegraph line was included in the sum total, £801,000,000, of the national debt on March 31. Mr. MONSELL, Under-Colonial Secretary, explained that the complaints of the Red River difficulty had been adjusted by the introduction into the Dominion Parliament of the bill creating the Province of Manitoba. He stated that Canada would retain all the public lands of the new province, with the exception of 12,000 acres, to secure its debt. The expedition is, in consequence, abandoned. The House of Commons was prevented to a long discussion last evening on a point of order, it having been stated that Mr. WHALLEY, member for Peterborough, had published certain comments on the proceedings. No result was reached.

Proposed Revised Translation of the Bible—The Cotton Trade.

LONDON, May 6.—The Convocation has asked the Crown for a revision of the translation of the Bible....The Statistics, commenting on cotton production, says indefinite expansion of manufacturing in England is a dissolving view. Capital and population increase rather than employment. New fields are demanded. Without them destitution and discontent would become a political danger. The accumulation of capacity fortunes in cotton spinning is no longer possible.

The rounding point will be sixty miles to windward for the first two races, and the third race will be over a triangular course, each side being twenty miles long. The umpires' steamer will take a select party to witness the races.

Capture of Gen. Goicouria—The Search for the Remainder of His Party—Departure for Havana for Trial.

After Gen. GOICOURIA's capture he was taken to Puerto Principe, and soon after ordered by Capt.-Gen. DE RODAS to be taken to Havana, under a guard of naval officers, for trial. His arrival is expected in this city to-morrow.

THE DOCTORS.

Last Day of the Medical Association—Women's College—Delsarte and Eclectics—Medical Delegates—Final Adjournment.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—In the American Medical Association, today, the Committee on Ethics reported favorably on the credentials of the delegates from the Women's Medical College and Women's Hospital, at Philadelphia. Dr. Dunning, Gen. Dix, and others, spoke against the admission of the female delegates, and in favor of the Delsarte system of medicine. A motion to admit the Eclectics was given over to the committee on ethics. A resolution declaring Dr. HORACE WELLS, of Boston, to be the discoverer of anæsthesia was adopted.

THE QUESTION OF COLOR.

Resolved, That no distinction of race or color shall exclude any regular graduate in medicine in this Association who are duly accredited delegates.

Meeting this resolution, the speaker was met with a storm of hisses, which compelled him to sit down. Cries of "Go on; go on!" were heard, and he said he would do so when the serpents became quiet. He then finished his reading, and was allowed to speak five minutes.

ANOTHER QUESTION OF ETHICS.

At the conclusion of his remarks, Dr. E. S. HAYES read the reasons presented by him relative to the exclusion of the delegates from the district of Columbia, as follows:

"In reply to the resolution of the Association calling upon the members of the Committee of Ethics to give reasons for the exclusion of the delegates from the Medical Department of the Howard University, they respectfully state, that it is nothing in the report which directly or indirectly implies that the Medical College in question is not a legitimate offspring of the Medical Department of Howard University, or that the Medical Society of the District of Columbia is not a regular Society, entitled to be represented in the National Medical Society. The exclusion on this subject reported by the Committee are as follows:

"1st. That the same Medical Society which recognizes and endorses the Medical College in question, has, by its Committee on Ethics, recommended the expulsion of Dr. Hunt, a member of the Medical Society, for the crime of consulting with a regular graduate of the Medical College of the District of Columbia, because that a large part of the members of the National Medical Society are in the habit of consulting with the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and generally and freely violating the rules and ethics of the Association, to which they have subscribed; that, since the adoption of the report of the Committee on Ethics, by its individual members, they have violated it by its individual members, and by the action of the Medical Society and the Medical Association of the District of Columbia, and that a motion of censure was made in the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and was only lost by its individual members voting against it, and that, if the Medical Society and the Medical Association of the District of Columbia, had not been guilty of the same offence of consulting with regular graduates, they would have voted for the motion of censure, and thus have carried it; that the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and the Medical Association of the District of Columbia, have, by their action, forfeited the confidence of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and are now, and freely violating the rules and ethics of the Association, to which they have subscribed; that, since the adoption of the report of the Committee on Ethics, by its individual members, they have violated it by the action of the Medical Society and the Medical Association of the District of Columbia, and that a motion of censure was made in the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, and was only lost by its individual members voting against it;

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NATHAN READ.—Elucidation of the great invention of steam-power to propel boats and railways. By NATHAN READ. Boston: Lee & Shepard. 1869.

The object of this book is to show that NATHAN READ was the true inventor of the practical application of steam-power to navigation and railways. NATHAN READ was born in Warren, Worcester County, Mass., in 1759, and died in the nineteenth year of his age in 1826. He was graduated at Harvard University in 1781, and was afterward a tutor there. Subsequently he studied medicine, but in 1789 he opened an apothecary's shop in Salem. While studying medicine he began to experiment in mechanic arts, and in 1791 he was elected a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. In 1795 he retired to his farm at Danvers where he built a structure across Water's River, which served the double purpose of a dam and a bridge. The year after, with some associates, he erected and put in operation the Salem Iron Factory, for the manufacture of chain-cables, anchors and other materials of iron for ship-building, he having the chief superintendence of the work. At this time he devised a machine for cutting and heading nails at one operation, for which he received a patent from the United States Government as the original inventor, Jan. 3, 1796. In October, 1800, Mr. READ was elected to Congress for Essex South District, to fill the vacancy made by the death of Judge SAWALL; and in November following he was elected as a member of the succeeding Congress, that is to say, for two years from and after March 4, 1801. He was thus a member during the memorable Presidential contest in the House of Representatives between JEFFERSON and BURR. In 1802 he was appointed by Governor STRONG, a special Justice of the Court of Common Pleas for the County of Essex; and after this, on his removal to Hancock, in 1807, he presided as Chief-Justice of Hancock County for many successive years. In 1815, Judge READ was elected a member of the Linnean Society of New-England.

From this summary it will be seen that the claims of the author of the book in hand are advanced in behalf of a man of liberal education and scientific tastes and attainments, who lived to a great age in the pursuits of his favorite pursuits, without, however, setting up any specific or public title to be the originator of the invention now ascribed to him. Mr. DAVID READ explains this by saying that his uncle did intend to arrange and publish the evidence establishing his claim; but that years and infirmities prevented his doing more than to arrange it, leaving to posterity the task of presenting it to the world. Since his decease, Mr. READ adds, the subject has rested until the work before us was prepared for the Press. Judge READ's manuscripts, drawings and correspondence have been freely used and his nephew hopes with the results of substantiating his claim. Mr. READ considers that it was needful to make "a complete revolution" in the steam-engine to prepare it for navigation even after WATT had made his great improvements upon it. Hence an account of the successive steps from the earliest history of the steam-engine up to the close of WATT's improvements has been given. The engine of SAVARY, NEWCOMEN or WATT, could not successfully be applied to boats and all attempts made with them failed; which, says our author "in itself shows the fallacy of all the claims to the invention of the steam-boat before the discovery and existence of machinery necessary to give it success." In order to show this it became important to notice the numerous experiments, both in this country and Europe, with the old form of engine, whether of NEWCOMEN or WATT, or those tried by RUMSEY and FITCH; and "to show wherein their failure consisted, to compare their engines with that afterward invented by READ, which, it is claimed, was the engine applied by FULTON on his first boat on the Hudson, and led to the final success of navigation by steam." The same is said of the many experiments with the locomotive-engine. "All proved unsatisfactory or wholly failed until the multi-tubular boiler and high-pressure engine which had been invented by READ to fit WATT's engine to the purposes of locomotion gave triumphant success to the locomotive as applied by GEORGE STEPHENSON.

To enter into the merits of Mr. READ's arguments and to collate his proofs with the claims of other engineers would require much time and patient analysis. That the argument in behalf of Judge READ is ably and strongly sustained is clear, even with a short examination. But hardly anything is more difficult than to adjust the claims of rival inventors. To this day England, Scotland, France and Spain claim the invention of the steam-boat; and England and France the locomotive-engine; while we, Americans, claim the credit of both for ourselves. There is much to be said, and doubtless much will be said on both sides, as regards the credit demanded for Judge READ. But in any case, we shall not regret the publication of his nephew's book. It is a highly interesting record of the life of a prominent and representative American, who did many things and did them all well. It contains some hitherto unpublished correspondence, and other valuable data concerning men of national reputation, which we are very glad to receive. And it is a vigorous, and in all senses, a creditable attempt to get justice for the memory and achievements of a venerable and eminent man, in order that both may stand as they deserve with posterity.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND. Volumes 7 and 8. By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, M.A. New-York: CHARLES SCRIBNER & Co. 1870.

The history of the earlier years of Queen ELIZABETH's reign is embraced in these volumes. They begin with her accession to the throne in 1558, and carry us through an unusually eventful period up to the birth of JAMES, the son of MARY, Queen of Scots, in 1566. To the mass facts recorded by other historians, Mr. FROUDE has made few, if any, additions; but the immense wealth of hitherto unpublished manuscripts which he has been able to appropriate, the Simancas archives to which the Spanish Government gave him unrestricted access, and the records of State papers, preserved in Paris, London, and Hatfield, which were thrown open to him, have enabled Mr. FROUDE to add to the value of his history by giving the contemporary opinions of prominent personages upon current events. His style is, in general, admirably adapted to history. He is curt, nervous and concise; and he makes both manners and scenery live before the imagination; but it is impossible to deny that he allows his prejudices to pervert his judgment, and that in speaking of certain characters he is liable to the charge of unfairness if not of absolute unfaithfulness. He does his best to exalt ELIZABETH at the expense of her unfortunate rival, MARY, Queen of Scots, and his remarks against this misguided, but brave and accomplished woman, goes far to enhance our pity for her wrongs, and our contempt for the ungenerous and vacillating character of the Sovereign whom the historian paints in such strong colors.

Mr. FROUDE has been praised, and not without apparent justice, for candor; but it is well to remember that the apparent magnitude and importance of events must in some measure depend upon the mind before which they are presented, and that the peculiarities with which extraordinary figures are invested will be a better understanding of the times in which they lived. But the Regent MURRAY and WALSINGHAM rise to a degree of importance in Mr. FROUDE's pages which has not always been accorded to them in other histories. Whatever just criticism may have to urge against Mr. FROUDE's general manner or his errors in particular instances, it will be generally admitted that he has produced one of the most valuable works of the age, and one that it is safe to predict will be preserved and esteemed by a remote posterity.

THE HAUNTED PARADISE. A Poem. By WILLIAM MOMBERT, author of "The Life and Death of Jesus." Rust III. New-York: [illegible]

The third part of The Earthly Paradise introduces no just expectations based on the foregoing volumes. Failure and Mr. MOMBERT, indeed, we long ago learned to be strangers; not more than the excellence of his work is the uniformity of that excellence. In the dangers of a narrative poem more than double the length of the Iliad a poet might be pardoned for sometimes dozing, but this is a privilege which Mr. MOMBERT never claims; he is not only never dull, but always delightful. His muse holds an equal flight through a serene and gracious atmosphere, never aspiring to the awful heights beyond, nay reach of Ken of human sympathy, and as little stooping to the ignoble ways of a lower and less delicate air. Herein, too, we find the most obvious peculiarities of the new poet's genius; his purity, revealed not less in thought and word than in the crystal clearness of a style which may rightly have been drawn from the "well of English undefiled;" his ardent yet tender humanity, which, like PROMETHEUS's kiss in his own poem, warms the cold shape of classic myth or Norse tradition into lovely and throbbing life; lastly, his power of sustained imaginative effect, in which no contemporary poet has equaled him except ROBERT BROWNING. And BROWNING's strength lies in a very different order, coming from the acute mental analysis and many-sided vision to which his subjects his imaginative creations. He is what may be called an intellectual, as Mr. MOMBERT is a sensuous, imagination; and for this reason, not less than because he is clear of speech where the other is intricate, simple of thought where the other is subtle, will the author of The Earthly Paradise always be taken more to the hearts of men.

"The Ring and the Book" seems to us in many respects the supreme literary achievement of the century. It tells of the sins and sorrows and aspirations of human beings who once lived upon the earth like ourselves and wrought the very deeds we read of in Mr. BROWNING's wonderful pages. The story itself is as pitiful as the wit or, still more potent, the wickedness of man has ever devised; and it is told with a delicacy and power, a mastery of all the hidden springs of passion and motive, that scarcely any one but SHAKESPEARE has shown before. Yet its psychological disquisitions, its miracles of spiritual insight do not so thrill us, do not so move us, do not so dim our eyes with a mist of unconscious tears, as the all fantastic troubles of Ogier the Dane, or the mishaps of Gudrun and her lovers. Nothing can be more unreal than the world and the people to which Mr. MOMBERT introduces us; yet, both he invests at once with a vivid and abiding interest. Because he seems to believe in them, we more than half believe; and Psyche, and Ogier, and Klarian, and Gudrun—even the marvelous fay lady whose eerie beauty brightens half the tales of the "Wanderers," live in our memories embalmed with something of the kindliness we feel for dear, departed friends. In this art—if that can be called an art which seems but the natural outgrowth of the story-teller's large and simple faith—in this way he has of attiring fable in the guise of fact, of beguiling his reader to share his own unquestioning acceptance of the marvels he relates, lies one of the greatest charms of Mr. MOMBERT's poetry.

Another is in the pensive tenderness which lends to his verse the grace of that

"Sadness and longing
That is not akin to pain,
And resembles sorrow only,
As the mist resembles the rain."

How potent a charm this is, no reader and lover of poetry needs to be told; that it is stronger in proportion to its indefiniteness is as little to be gainsaid. Great sorrows are not only dumb but dry; yet there are certain moods far from unhappy when one feels it to be the greatest of luxuries to give one's self up wholly to the sway of that vague and indefinable melancholy, which is the spirit's protest against monotony of joy, and which suggests, without enforcing tears, TENNYSON has well expressed the feeling in that loveliest of his idyllic songs:

"Tears, idle tears,—I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depths of some divine despair,
Rise from my heart, and gather to my eyes
In looking on the happy Autumn fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more."

We know not how better to convey the subtle influence which seems to breathe throughout all of Mr. MOMBERT's poetry, which we have discerned not less in Jason than in The Earthly Paradise. Underneath his sweetest and cheerliest music there seems to sound always the faint, far voice of an inarticulate regret. In his laughter one detects the echo of a sigh—the exhaling spirit of "the days that are no more." Withal there is nothing morbid or lackadaisical about the man or his work. On the contrary, his verse is flooded with sunshine and instinct with all the freshness and buoyancy of nature, the song of birds, the rustle of leaves, the murmur of rivulets, the scent of apple-blossoms, the fragrance of the hay-fields. But as the strongest natures are the kindest, and the soundest fruits the sweetest, so this freshest and healthiest of modern poets, is the most tender, and so the most true. To feel this thoroughly and to measure his book fitly, it should be read under the beauty of Summer boughs and June sunlight, yet within hearing of the inexorable yearning of the sea. One is tempted to believe that these twofold influences must have conspired to fashion its spirit. It is to be observed that this undercurrent of sadness is most perceptible in the tales of the "Wanderers" themselves, and that it increases with the waning year. We may fancy that falling leaves and darkening skies lent something of their desolation to the hearts of the story-tellers, and so guided the choice of their themes.

Certain it is that in the present volume the stories gradually deepen in pathos until they reach the point of tragedy in "The Lament of Gudrun." This, which is the longest, is also, to our mind, the best of the tales thus far published. Indeed, we know of no other narrative poem in the language which surpasses them in beauty and pathos, in simplicity and clearness of recital, in vividness of description and tragic interest. Klarian is surely a noble creation; and the struggles of Bodli with the love that was traitor to friendship, the despair of Gudrun, [illegible] less good than this is "The Land East of the Sun," wherein figures the same lovely and wondrous fay lady, who is the heroine of "The Wedding of the Falcon," "Ogier the Dane," in the former volume, and "The Man who Never Laughed Again" in this. We shall not, however, attempt to outline or to criticise the individual poems in the volume before us. Suffice it to say that all are delightful, and that whosoever of our readers has not yet read them will do himself a wrong in longer neglecting it.

These remarks are somewhat rambling and discursive, but Mr. MOMBERT is a poet who almost bids defiance to the reviewer. Once under the spell of his enchanting music, one forgets to criticise or to do aught but enjoy. And the wisest thing the critic can do, is to content himself with sitting down at random, as we have done, the impressions gathered here and there, like stray blossoms from this wilderness of sweets. We owe Mr. MOMBERT too much gratitude for giving us a poem that we can enjoy without feeling that we ought to probe it for problems and morals, to attempt to find fault with him. We have grown somewhat weary of the modern metaphysical bards, who would set philosophy to music, and think no poem worthy of the name which does not propound a spiritual conundrum in every line, and unstitle a creed in every stanza. Mr. BROWNING is a great poet, but he has much to answer for in afflicting us with the dyspeptic doubtings of a brood of followers who bid fair to reduce poetry to the rules of EUCLID. Mr. MOMBERT comes opportunely to rescue us from this tyranny of the profound and subtle. And his influence on our literature must inevitably be wholesome and purifying. If he can lure away our coming poets from the basks and sulks of pradism speculation to the old-fashioned and simple and healthy ways, of whose beauty and freshness he himself gives proof and praise at once, he will have earned a sure meed of gratitude and fame than any other poet of his time. But even if he fails in this, if he finds Ephraim so wedded to his idols that no charm can entice him from them, he will still have our thanks for himself and what he has given us. We may one day esteem it a special fortune to have seen the time when in our poetical firmament, long obscured and troubled by lurid meteors and eccentric suns, arose this planet, whose pure and tranquil radiance reflects and renews the glory of the "day-star of English song."

MAN'S WRONGS AND WOMAN'S FOIBLES. By KATE MANTON. Boston: CROSBY & DAMRELL. 1870.

If this story possesses the slightest interest, or if we could find in the entire volume one redeeming thought, we might, perhaps, get over the egotism of the narrator, the ungracious obtrusion of self, and the conspicuous absence of anything worth reading. But there is nothing to recommend in these pages, which we have painfully perused in the vain hope of finding something which might justify the assertion of the first page. None of the incidents are wholly impossible, but they are all extremely unlikely, and we are unable to picture any state of society in which they could occur. If the writer of "Man's Wrongs" has any intention of again favoring the community with her literary efforts, it would be well that she should acquaint herself with the manners of good society here and abroad; she might thus give a greater appearance of reality to her sketches, which would also be improved by some little attention to style.

THE WOMAN OF BUSINESS. By MARGARET SAVAGE. New-York: D. APPLETON & CO. 1870.

The characters in this book are drawn by a master-hand. They are marked by distinct individuality, and each forms a lifelike and remarkable portrait of whose motives and peculiarities the reader as well as the author has a clear perception; they are not made up as an exercise of subtle ingenuity, but are evidently illustrations of human experience. The narrative, though by no means devoid of interest, is inartistic in plot, is loosely put together, has no apparent purpose; and although the moral is unexceptionable, and many of the scenes are natural and well-sustained, Mr. SAVAGE's apparent power of constructing a story does not in the present instance equal his skill in sketching character.

OUR POLITICAL DEGENERACY.

The New Statesmen Compared With the Old—Legislatures Not More Corrupt—What They Did in Old Times.

THE BENCHER, Monday, April 25, 1870.

The writer in Putnam assumes that there is a political degeneracy, and that a disciple of the free-trade, universal Democracy school is the proper man to correct it. This is the very thing to be proved. I deny both the fact and the theory. He appeals to the age of political demi-gods. I have shown that they were no superior to the worship of the gods of Olympus. He says of his political heroes—as HOMER said of Diomede and Ajax—that they lifted weights and cast javelins greater and farther than three men of these degenerate days could do! There is as much truth in what he said as in what HOMER said. He cited JOHN TAYLOR, of Caroline, and NATHANIEL MACON, the first a visionary theorist, without any practical ability, and the second a pleasant conversationalist, who voted against everything. He cited MADISON and HAMILTON—the first inferior to JACKSON, and the second in eloquence not equal to CLAY. He cited SILAS WRIGHT and BOREMAN—two men who always acted with VAN BUREN, and aided in corrupting the already corrupt politics of New-York. I am glad the age of such heroes has passed away.

But let us return to the point. "Degeneracy" is a term which implies that there has been a "better period" formerly, from which we have fallen. That I deny, and I shall proceed with the example. I have compared several together. Let us see these up in wholesale. It is ten years since our great civil war began, and now I challenge comparison between the men who led this country in those ten years and those of any other ten years since 1776—the century. There was LINCOLN, CHASE, STANTON, SUMNER, THAD. STEVENS, MORTON, and others of like character. Now I want any one who believes in "degeneracy" to take any ten years he chooses in the century, (the administration of WASHINGTON if he pleases,) and show me by the facts that in that period there were men equal to (to say nothing of superiority) those men who led us through the great rebellion. I think it would be a good exercise in history (public and private) to try that experiment. De mortuis nil nisi bonum is the maxim, but De vivorum nil nisi verum would do better. Where was the men of past periods who would have issued LINCOLN's proclamation? Where was the Secretary of War, from list old KNOX down through DEARBORN and Armstrongs and Jefferson Davies who equaled the great War Secretary STANTON? Where was then a more incorruptible man than CHASE? Where was there in the senate a more accomplished orator than SUMNER? a more quick-witted than THADDEUS? a man of more patriotic energy than OLIVER MORTON? I challenge the comparison from any period of our history. In the great crisis of our destiny we moved men, aided by great moral and intellectual qualities to command the people, and Divine Providence raised them up. Their monuments are not yet built, and carping criticism takes its microscope and points to their little flaws of character; but remember that the flaws in their characters are no greater than those in the period of WASHINGTON and JEFFERSON.

But I proceed to what I suppose the writer thought his strong point—the real or imaginary corruption of legislative bodies. Does it exist? And if it does, is it any greater than it has been in past periods? He says:

"Our State Legislatures are possibly not quite so decided a lot as the New-York Common Council, still, if we now believe the reports that come to us, many that have joined the ranks of the Democratic Party from its organization, or from the Republican Party, seem to regard it as a kind of reward, and are really on the way to the Penitentiary when they are not there already. Many of them are, indeed, so well known to be corrupt, that a considerable number of the Penitentiary cells are always open to receive them."

Now, observe, first, that this is put forth as a charge against these several Legislatures; and, second, that this is evidence of degeneracy. The whole point is in the last idea, for there has never been a period in which there was not much evil and corruption; and if the object of the writer is simply to correct these evils and make our country purer and better, I am with him with all my heart. Let us do anything which will improve the morals or sustain the integrity of the country. But I deny that there is any "degeneracy" in this regard. First, then, of the facts. I shall say nothing of the Legislatures of New-York and Pennsylvania, because I know nothing. But I assert as an absolute fact, that the Legislature of Ohio has not been charged with corruption. In all the violence of party spirit, neither Democrats nor Republicans have charged the Legislature with being corrupt. Even newspapers, with all their gossip and rumors, have not done it. I have never heard of it being charged on a single member. I have known the Legislature for many years, and have never heard of corruption. One reason of this is that in Ohio legislation is general and not special. Any one who wants a charter can get it under a general law. I have never heard the Legislature of Indiana being corrupt, notwithstanding all acts of party violence. It is quite possible that some of the Legislatures may be corrupt, but I do not believe a tenth part of what is said on that subject. I don't think we have any more right to slander public bodies and public men than we have to slander individuals. But if two or three Legislatures are corrupt, there is no "degeneracy" in it. I will now give some examples of how upright and excellent Legislatures were in his heroic age. Sixty years ago the whole Legislature of Georgia was bribed! This was in the celebrated case of the "Yazoo Claims." The fact was so notorious that the people took the records of the Legislature and burnt them on the green at Milledgeville! It will be rather hard for the negro Legislatures to get beyond that; so we may leave the South. Nearly half a century ago, there was an investigation in the New-York Legislature, which showed that twenty members, more or less, had been corrupted in the matter of certain bank and insurance companies. I cannot refer to names and dates without the papers of the day, but anybody can find out who is curious about the matter. In about thirty-four years ago—it cost the Bank of the United States four million of dollars to be rechartered, as the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States, by a Democratic Legislature. Those were the days of Democratic purity! Of Democratic honesty!

Of Democratic "victories" of the money power was there ever such a shame! And, remember, this was the party of his men of "convictions", the Silas Wrights and Michael Hoffmans! Quanta dans voir parfois prise dessus! I am glad they were so demented that they scattered their party to the four winds; that they have now little to do except to weep like the Jewish Baby Ion, and build monuments to JOHN TAYLOR, of Caroline; JOHN C. CALHOUN, of Fort Hill, and SILAS WRIGHT, of St. Lawrence. But the writer of Putnam has another terrible evidence of corruption. Here it is:

"Or if the Hon. Mr. Tom shows the inestimable privilege to present free transportation for his wife's worst relations, or favors with the name of "his military" a party of drivers with the name of "his military" to work the shelter of a neat stone cottage, built for him in the Commissioners' Park, on the capital, that Party of the Revolving Service knows full well, nearly full the limit of a Congressman's salary! All these several acts of pleasure and plunder are considered by the same."

Now, there is no "degeneracy" in this. When I was very young, I heard of Hon. Mr. ——, who freshed his washing some every week. That man was from North Carolina, though I don't believe it was Hon. NATHANIEL MACON. Now, as to gen-lemen and statesmen, perhaps members of Congress have been too liberal in franking; but who of the disinterested, intelligent critics of this country will complain that Congress has supplied last Sept. negroes and female halls with a liberal supply of stationery? This complaint is just on a level with NATHANIEL MACON and Sir as Wyngate. I learned in the case of superior talents and great wealth, with much public good and great evil, and would make a Governor of whom Vermont might well be proud.

One of the Georgia papers is particularly desirous that ROBERT E. LEE and JOHNSTON should live long in the land. Speaking of the former's illness it says: "Heaven send that it deal kindly with the grand old man, and not snap the silver cord at least until his country can accomplish such an effective disposition with much more congenial men we are sure they could summon now." And alluding to the latter it expresses itself thus: "May the dial of time that shall point to the hour when, in the nature of things, he must go hence, move slowly indeed."

In declining an invitation to be present at the laying of the corner-stone of the new library building for Auburn Theological Seminary, Secretary SEWARD wrote: "You are well aware, I think, of my sentiments of sadness. I attach quite as much importance to the spiritual and intellectual culture of the people as I do to the development of the resources of the Republic and its aggrandizement. Secondly, there has never been a stone laid or a tree planted here in Auburn that did not become an object of affection and pride on my part. But my dear Sir, I am counselled by physicians, as well as by propriety, to seek relaxation which cannot be found in public affairs or popular assemblies."

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Second Genoa of Finance.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

At the close of an interesting letter published in the TIMES of April 27, on relation to the Legal-tender act, Mr. SHAILLEGRE asserts that a true system of finance for this country has yet to be organized, and in this belief many intelligent thoughtful men already concur, though as yet no one has appeared who can supply the acknowledged want.

There are, I trust, some of your readers who can look back without prejudice upon the history of the United States Bank, prior to the removal of the deposits by ANDREW JACKSON, and see that we have had nothing since that time fit for our purpose, as a Government fiscal agent, or able to supply in a legitimate manner, and in harmony with the natural laws of trade, not only a sound paper currency, but one which would adjust itself readily to the varying and generally increasing necessities of our commerce. It is not necessary to claim that the management of this institution was in all respects just what we would have. But, it is safe to say, that we have had nothing since such as a young, enterprising, growing, borrowing country, like our own, should have, and it is to be hoped that the agitation and discussions which must ensue before the financial question is finally adjusted, will lead to some results more creditable to our capacity as men of business, than anything yet offered in Congress.

One whose business life dates back to the days of the United States Bank, and who can well remember when the Suffolk Bank system was established in New-England, may perhaps be justified in offering to younger men the conclusions reached after a long and somewhat intimate connection with financial operations, wherein there has been ample opportunity to observe impartially the working of both these institutions as applied to public as well as private business, hoping that others may be able to see that it was a grave error we committed in divorcing our Government finances from those of the people at large, and that there can be no real peace for the country until the currency and the fiscal agents shall be provided equal to all our wants, both present and prospective, public as well as private.

The letter of Mr. BINNEY, on the 11th of November, 1836, to JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, shows how mischievous this policy of setting up the Sub-Treasury was at the outset, and Mr. BRADFORD in his communication intimated the necessity for some other mode of managing the public finances, though he does not intimate what it shall be. It will aid us in the solution of this problem, if we remember that of the thousands of millions of dollars which fall due in the world daily, a very small proportion is paid by the use of coin, or even with bank-notes; both these being but small changes when compared with the vast amount settled by the use of checks, drafts and other forms of paper, which are as much currency as the notes. The only question we ask when paper falls due is payment, and we do not pay in specie, we pay the amount of service or value involved in the transaction.

We do not desire gold, for we are not paid with that, but with the commodities which that will purchase; and, on the day of clearing is made and these obtained, we pay only loss paper but from the fact, as we should not be with paper were it not for this, that Government shall recognize gold as our standard of value, and, if possible, force our creditors to agree with them, the expense of exchange and the uncertainty should, at all events, be avoided. Government, in its turn, to the extent of its ability, should secure to the existing standard, by repealing the Legal-tender bill, with a provision that our currency shall be made so, that, at all times, it may, upon demand, be exchanged for gold, or, if preferred, be used in payment of duties, taxes, or any other demand due to the Government, at its nominal value, in gold, or its equivalent, in specie, or its equivalent, in specie, or its equivalent, in specie

WHERE ARE THE POLICE?

A Few Short Sketches on the Police Department—Necessity for an Improvement in the Force—Reforms that are Needful—What the Police Do.

How often does it happen that citizens in this City have occasion for the services of a policeman and fail to find him! The phrase "Where are the Police?" is frequently uttered by indignant people, and in many cases the applied sarcasm is wholly undeserved, as we propose to show in the present article. When a certain gentleman in the City arrested him in Fulton-street, and in the character of an officer betrayed the most sublime indifference to calls for assistance, his audience applauded the picture, believing that it was a correct one. Yet how far from the truth was the down time parading on the stage in these veils! The habit of ridiculing or misrepresenting the Police is not of native growth, for in London the "bobbies" are made a continual butt, both in the comic journals and on the stage. There they are held up to derision in the most practical manner, until the verbal contempt which them is accompanied with the idea that the character of a member of the force is one which detected in the commission of some petty offence. It is a fact that the Police force is not considerably on a military footing, and when on duty in this City. In that classic city the State Constables interfere considerably with the duties of the Police, and the discipline is not kept up to the standard of what it is in a metropolis in this more cosmopolitan City. In Philadelphia the life of a policeman is a sinecure compared with that of the New-York Police, and he is permitted considerable license in the manner of performing his duty while on post. Nothing is so common in that suburban city as to see a policeman seated on a corner of a Chestnut-street store, while an industrious Jerseyman is busily hammering, taking for his pay a twenty-cent mission from the brass-buttoned conservator of the public peace for the execution unmolested. Fancy one of our Broadway Police guards neglecting his duty in that way. Nothing of the nature there would be endured, and he would be a fortunate fellow if such conduct should be his chosen specialty of duty. Policemen in Philadelphia wear their coats buttoned or unbuttoned, just as the fancy takes them. They do not wear belts or batons in the day time, and the members seldom present a fine, or military appearance. The Mr. Superintendent of Police in this City, Mr. KENNEDY, used frequently to relate an amusing experience of his while visiting Philadelphia. It was in the midnight a storm of snow that he arrived there late one Winter night, during the war. He (as he said) had taken a drink on the route, and came out of hack drives also lavishly. The worthy Superintendent plodded wearily through the drifting snow until he became doubtful of his course, so like all New-Yorkers, looked for a policeman. Fortunately, he encountered two of them on a certain cross-walk, where they were talking to each other in the intention in the surprise experienced by finding the officers enjoying the comforts of an umbrella!

"Excuse me, gentlemen," said the Superintendent, "I'm from New-York. But do they allow you to use umbrellas?"

"Offenses," was the much rejoinder; "why shouldn't they?"

"Why not, indeed," replied the dumfounded traveler as he proceeded on his way afraid to question two such worthy gentlemen, says Mr. KENNEDY, lest they report their clubs, as New-Yorkers are wont to do. Mr. KENNEDY never sought to introduce umbrellas into his own Department, however he might admire them on a snowy night in Philadelphia. In Chicago the Police are uniformed, as they are also in Baltimore. In Chicago, the Police wear a dirty blue uniform in very bad condition, and the Department is a disgraceful one indeed. The entire detective force was recently dismissed by the authorities in consequence of certain delinquencies. Nearly all of the cities in the United States draw their Police ideas from New-York, though they do not always copy as faithfully as they might.

CONDITION AND ORGANIZATION OF THE POLICE.

The City of New-York is increasing at rapidly in population, despite the action of real estate owners in keeping up an exorbitant scale of rents; that the Board of Police Commissioners daily feel the want of an increase in the effective strength of the force under their control. There are at present on duty in this City, 52 Captains, 181 Sergeants, 75 detectives, and 1,200 patrolmen, making an aggregate strength, with the Superintendent and three Inspectors, of 2,327. This force is divided into thirty-two Precincts, four Court squads, a Sanitary company, and a Detective squad at the Central Office, with thirty-two Precincts, with the exception of the Twenty-fourth, City Hall Police, and the Twenty-sixth, or City Hall Police, now in possession of the streets and thoroughfares of the City. The Harbor Police are located on a steam-boat, and do patrol duty on the rivers and in the harbor in small row-boats, they in the steamboat being dispatched from the brass-buttoned conservator of the public peace to pay the execution unmolested. Fancy one of our Broadway Police guards neglecting its duty in that way. Nothing of the nature there would be endured, such would be a fortunate fellow if such conduct should be his chosen specialty of duty. Spanish Bishops in Rome refuse to take the oath to the new Constitution.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, the bill to establish a uniform system of education in the District of Columbia was rejected. Adverse reports were made on the bill to increase the fees of Marshals in Western Arkansas, and the bill providing for a special term of the Circuit Court in the Southern District of Ohio. The Senate substituted a bill of its own for that of the House reducing the number of officers of the army, and it was made the special order for Tuesday next. A long debate ensued on the House resolution fixing the 4th of July for final adjournment, during which the merits of pending measures, which, it is claimed, would be jeopardized by so early an adjournment, were discussed. The resolution was postponed until May 16. The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was then taken up and passed by a majority of the Whole, and, after debate on the subject, a bill discontinuing the publication of the laws in newspapers, was agreed to. Notice was given of an amendment abolishing the Blue Book, published for gratuitous distribution, and the Senate adjourned till Monday. The Senate was not in session.

GENERAL.

A Pottsville, Penn., dispatch says a strong secret movement is in progress to persuade the miners of the Lehigh and Wyoming mines to go to join the strikers now idle in order to compel the operators to yield. Seven dwelling-houses on Catharine-street, Cincinnati, were also burned yesterday. Hiram WALKER, a fireman, was severely injured by falling walls.....The boiler of the new water-works at Steubenville, Ohio, exploded yesterday, demolishing the building in which it was situated. The fireman was blown through the roof, and fell fifty feet from the building. His injuries are probably fatal. The engineer was not much hurt. The damage is about $10,000.....The schooner Rachel Foss, of Hampden, Me., was wrecked in a squall on Wednesday, off Cutler, Me., and the Captain, William LEACH, drowned.....The steam-boat Rome struck a snag in the Mississippi opposite Natchez, Miss., and sank on the 5th inst. To the address of the spokesman of his lake visitors, who thanked Mr. SEWARD for the interview, the Ex-Secretary made a pleasant little response on the influence of lake scenery on men and countries, on literature and history.....The American Medical Association had another stormy session yesterday on the question of color, during which the Committee on Ethics made an explanation of the grounds on which their adverse report of the day before was based. A resolution censuring the members of the Committee who signed the majority report was laid on the table. A resolution setting forth that the question of race or color did not enter into the considerations on which report of the Committee on Ethics was based was adopted by 112 to 97, when the Association adjourned sine die.

We are indebted to Capt. HERZICA, of the steam-ship Suevonia, at this port from Hamburg, for late Continental papers.

The Republican County Convention met last evening corner of Twenty-second-street and Broadway, Hon. JOHN COCHRAN in the chair. A Committee was appointed to confer with the organizations opposed to Tammany Hall, in relation to the County nominations for the approaching election.

Mr. GRAHAM began his summing up for the defense in the case of DANIEL MCFARLAND yesterday, and occupied nearly the whole day in arguing points of law and citing authorities in cases of homicide, to show the defense has been a plea of insanity. On Monday he will go over the evidence with the jury.

Proceedings were commenced before Commissioner OSBORN yesterday, with a view to the extradition of THOMAS H. JOHNSON, charged with the murder of EDWARD BARRS, aboard the English bark Morning Light, when at sea.

The Political Future in These States.

The elements are being moved in three States with reference to approaching political complications, and we are thus afforded a fresh illustration of the constant necessity of foresight in our political thought and action. There is no other country in the civilized world in which the mind of the people is kept so constantly and thoroughly en rapport with present as well as future political necessities. No sooner is one event decided than the electors begin to study the future, and to calculate its probabilities, its necessities, and the persons who ought to deal with it. Everybody, from the highest to the lowest, feels a personal interest in these issues, either through individual ambition or a desire for the general good. The result is that when any great political question is presented for definite action, the people are prepared to act intelligently upon it, and in a great degree to control their representatives in its decision.

The people of Maine are now busily discussing the question of a successor to Senator MORRILL, whose term expires on the 4th of March next. The merits and demerits of a number of candidates are being canvassed, and the prospect is that the struggle will be a triangular affair, like Jack Easy's duel, and perhaps time will produce four or five contestants. Mr. MORRILL, Speaker BLAINE, Gov. CHAMBERLAIN and Gov. ISRAEL WASHBURNE, Jr., have all been strongly recommended, but Mr. BLAINE is reported to have declined a contest. The State is fortunate in having such an abundance of good material from which to choose, and still more fortunate in being able to conduct the canvass without that bitterness of feeling which usually attends personal struggles.

In Vermont, a lively discussion is going on as to the Republican candidate for Governor. Among the names most prominently put forward are those of Hon. FRANCIS BILLINGS, and Hon. JULIUS CONVERSE, both of Woodstock, and both "West side" candidates. The "East side" presents Hon. A. L. MINER, of Manchester, and Gov. HEMPEL. Apart from the question of locality, Hon. JOHN W. STEWART, of Middlebury, has recently been brought forward as a new candidate. Vermont is so nearly unanimous in its Republicanism, that the struggle is ended in the nominating Convention, and the poll is a mere matter of form.

In Ohio both parties have actively begun the canvass for the State election, which takes place on the second Tuesday in October. The Republican Convention is called for the 19th day of August, and the Democratic Convention for the 29th of June. The State officers to be chosen are Secretary of State, Judge of the Supreme Court, Member of the Board of Public Works, and Controller. The greatest interest, however, centers in the members of Congress. It is understood that Messrs. SCHENCK, WINANS, UPSON, GARFIELD, BINGHAM, AMBLER, and perhaps others on the Republican side, are candidates for re-election, as, also, Mr. CESENA, Democrat. Judge WELKER, of the Fourteenth District, declines a re-nomination, and Hon. JAMES MONROE, of Oberlin, is urged to succeed him. The result of the canvass is assured, although the Democrats promise a lively fight. With the colored vote—which will be at least five thousand solid Republican—the State is counted good for at least fifteen thousand Republican majority.

In each of these States there is every prospect of that harmony and energy which ought to ensure our party success in every place where we have were divisions before. No disinterested man can doubt that the Republicans have, upon the whole, deserved well of the country. They have endeavored to carry out the will of the people with fidelity, and in the teeth of innumerable obstacles. The President has honestly fulfilled his pledges, and avoided all those errors into which his immediate predecessor fell, to the great disturbance of public affairs. We believe, then, that we may appeal with confidence to the people in all the approaching elections. We have yet many things before us to accomplish, but what we have achieved in the past is the best guarantee for our work in the future. With reduced taxation, and a revision of that part of our revenue system which checks rather than encourages the prosperity of the nation, we shall be able to say that no other existing organization could or would have done half so much to promote the common good. If Republicans in Congress will only do their duty, we need not fear that the country will inflict them.

The old Man and the Sea.

The old discussion has been revived on the question whether or not American statesmanship has degenerated of late years. Political writers, and especially those of mature years who have been accustomed to measure all men and events by old standards, and who look upon new men as intruders into the sacred temple in which they have set up the altars of CALHOUN, HAYNE, WEBSTER, CLAY, and a score of other worthies, are very apt to assume that we have fallen upon evil times wherein comparative pigmies rule the councils of the nation. With all due deference to the "fathers," we are not prepared to admit the utter degeneracy of the "children" of the Republic. Conceding of the Washingtonian era, and of that which immediately succeeded it, that there were "giants in those days," we yet incline to believe that in many instances their dimensions have been magnified by time and distance, and that their apparently exceptional greatness in our eyes is largely the result of circumstances. In the first place, the opportunities which our earlier statesmen possessed as the originators of the Government, were highly favorable to distinction; but even more favorable than the opportunity afforded them as political architects, was the lack of competition which they could boast of, and the lower standard of criticism to which they were subjected.

There are two points which demand consideration: In the first place the average American citizen of today is a much more intelligent, and consequently a much more exacting critic of statesmanship, than the average citizen of fifty years ago; secondly, the competition among the candidates for the honors of statesmanship is infinitely more severe than any which had to be encountered then. These two facts, properly appreciated, ought to go far toward directing us to a wise decision on the question. There is no doubt that the proportion of exceptionally great men, fifty years ago, was much greater than it is now; but we are confident that the average standard of American statesmanship is much higher now than then. If this is admitted—and we think it cannot be successfully gainsaid—it follows that we have advanced rather than degenerated in political affairs.

The old adage that "no man is a hero in the eyes of his valet" has a strong application to this discussion. Not only has there been a great deal of glamour thrown around the characters of our elder statesmen, which is disadvantageous to the living in making up a comparative estimate, but there is no means of knowing how the statesmen of today will stand with posterity fifty years hence. Comparisons are odious, but we doubt if any elder trio will stand higher than LINCOLN, SEWARD and STANTON. It is unfair to judge men in the light of the prejudices and passions of their own time, and hence we regard the discussion of our "political degeneracy" as an unprofitable exercise of human ingenuity.

What is Our Tea Policy?

It is not easy to believe that our country, which is one of the two only successful Republics of modern times, can learn lessons from Spanish statesmanship. But great griefs and evils are also great teachers, and we need only refer to the speeches of Señor CASTELLAR—first orator of Europe, and one of its purest publicists—to prove that there are Spanish minds which, in solving the problem of the wretched condition of Spain, have arrived at conclusions drawn from their own misfortunes, which we need not be too proud to study. The Spanish Republicans have just published a manifesto in every way worthy of attentive consideration here.

The address in question protests against what it calls an "unitarian" Republic, and demands that in any form of government by the people which may be devised for Spain, the Republic shall be "Federative," like that of the United States and Switzerland, the only Republics which have achieved success. This is merely another form of insisting upon the importance of local self-government, and upon the impossibility of wisely managing widely scattered and varied communities by a centralized power. That is what France attempts to do. The Emperor seeks not only to control the general policy of the nation, but to be felt himself like an omnipresence and omnipotence in every household of the Empire, controlling its religion, and in political affairs conceding to it only what may be called liberty under instructions from headquarters. If the Emperor were omniscient, such a scheme of government might last. As it is, it is only maintained through constant peril of anarchy and the display of the bayonet. England, on the other hand, although a monarchy, is peculiarly a decentralized Government. The crown maintains the form of appointing the Governors of colonies, and, in the determination of the colonists, the cost of supporting them in semi-royal state. But each colony manages its own affairs, and the Pennsylvania State Legislature, for instance, never troubles itself about the business of Great Britain, or even about questions involving the Supremacy of the Empire in abstract. The one instance in which England has departed from the theory of decentralization of local government was in the case of Ireland; and how grievous a blunder that was, and in what a sea of troubles Mr. GLADSTONE now finds himself, in trying to patch up petty quarrels between Pat and his landlord by solemn Acts of Parliament, we need not remind our readers.

We have cited these rather trite, but still important facts, with a view of making a "home application." The tendency of our legislation at present is toward a Unitarian rather than a Federative republic. It is the natural, to some extent the unavoidable result of the civil war; but men should not forget that the whole end and aim of that war was to maintain the Federal Union upon its primary plan of leaving to States the control of their internal affairs, while States should leave to counties and cities a similar sovereignty over their local governments. The State was to be the sunspin, and not the vassal of Congress. But in the hard necessities that followed the smoking of the rebellion, Congress found itself compelled by the emergency to transcend its ancient powers, and legislate within districts which had been States, instructing them as to what laws they should pass, and becoming responsible for the government of the Southern people.

That necessity has happily passed, and we should return as rapidly as possible to the old idea. But the habit of centralized government still exists. We find Congress still asserting the power first to create, and then destroy, the Legislature of Georgia; to question the republicanism of Tennessee; to charter railroads in competition with existing lines to the invasion of State rights; to go within the bounds of a sovereign State and build Niagara Ship Canals, Fox River Improvements, and Kanawha Canals.

All these acts are a departure from federation republicanism, and involve a danger of undue centralization. Here in New-York we have just been compelled by the aggregate common sense of the people to abandon our pet scheme of an all-wise Napoleonism at Albany, and to restore to this City the old-time privilege of controlling our own municipal affairs. We may do it very well or very badly, but that is our business, and we shall prosper or suffer without again appealing for outside advice and mastery. Let Congress take the hint. If it can legislate wisely for the nation at large, and harmonize its different interests and antagonisms, it will give us all we need, and it may spare us any further efforts for working out our local reform.

National Banking—The War on State Circulation.

We may assume that the recent suggestion for a repeal of the tax upon State Bank circulation cannot possibly succeed with Congress. The proposition was largely voted down in the Senate, early in February, and it would find little support if introduced in the House of Representatives.

State Banking, so far as the issue of bills of circulation is concerned, is obsolete. It was simply tolerated, as Mr. Secretary GUTHRIE fifteen years ago clearly demonstrated, in the absence of the exercise of the Federal authority to regulate the currency. It grew to be something of a necessity, because of the disagreement of political parties in the country on the question of the Bank of the United States, and its recharter or refusal of rechartering in 1811, 1816 and 1832. The first Bank of the United States—1791-1811—was an unquestioned success, but as the charter drew to a close, the Bank was unfortunately made a party question, and President MADISON, as the then representative of the old Republican, as contra-distinguished from the Federal Party—defeated in the election of Mr. JEFFERSON to the Presidency in 1800—vetoed the Bill of recharter, though it was voted for by many of his friends in Congress.

This veto proved unfortunate, and as the breaking out of the war of 1812 clearly demonstrated, most untimely. The absence of the Bank was grievously felt throughout this three years' struggle with Great Britain. The State Banks were without the credit or resources or ability to help the Treasury in the emergency, and the few loans which they undertook to carry through were made at immense sacrifices, and paid for in greatly depreciated local bank notes, having almost as many different values as there were States in the Union. Mr. MADISON, however, was too great a statesman to refuse either to acknowledge or correct the blunder, and before the close of his second term of office, signed, in 1816, the bill of charter for a new Bank of the United States, with nearly double the capital of the first charter of 1791. The Bank became a Republican measure coincident with the Tariff of 1816, and was the workmanship of, or approved by, ALEXANDER JAMES DALLAS, the Secretary of the Treasury, ALBERT GALLATIN, JOHN C. CALHOUN, WILLIAM LOUNDES and HENRY CLAY. The Bank, and the Tariffs of 1816, 1824 and 1828, brought the credit of the Government up to the highest point, and enabled the country to pay off the public debt.

But a year or two after President JACKSON came into office, he took issue with the administration of the Bank, and on this question first parted company with his South Carolina friends, CALHOUN and McDUFFIE. He indicated his purpose to refuse a renewal of the Bank charter in 1836, if he should be elected to a second term, and upon this issue the administration of the Bank very unwisely forced the bill of recharter in the Summer of 1832, on the eve of the Presidential canvass,—and the veto of JACKSON, and his triumphant reelection followed.

The President and Mr. VAN BUREN, in 1836, championed the State Banks as Treasury depositories, and with the popularity of the Administration, growing out of the rout of South Carolina Nullification, the Bank of the United States was killed out, if not only fell as a national institution, but was utterly ruined as a State institution. The Pennsylvania State Bank, which had been the fiscal agent of the General Government, failed, up in 1841, and the Sub-Treasury succeeded to their Federal functions.

The great mistake of the advocates of the National Banking system was in standing out for a monopoly for a single institution and its dependent branches. The system should have been free from the beginning. It should especially have been made free after the first charter of 1791. The growth of the country, alike with the popular repugnance of the people to every form of monopoly, demanded it. But the sad experience of the war, as we have noticed, caused the re-establishment of another bank with exclusive privileges, and it was not until nearly fifty years thereafter that free National Banking found a persistent and successful advocate in Secretary CHASE, the author of the present law. It was to Mr. FESSENDEN and other practical minds of New-York, however, that Mr. CHASE was indebted for the principle and well-established provisions and workings of free banking, established in this State after the general explosion of the old close charters and defective and hopless safety funds in 1837, and the New-York law was made the model of the National Act of 1863.

The deplorable attempts of the Western States to copy the original New-York law, without observing the additional safeguards which our New-York Legislature, from the lights of experience, constantly threw around it, and which in twenty years had made it as nearly perfect as any local system could be rendered, doubtless contributed to carry the National Bill for Free Banking through Congress. New-York was not anxious for it. Indeed the City Banks were at first hostile to it, but subsequently acquiesced, and most of them are now successfully banking under it.

The system was one of the successes, as well as instrumentalities, of the war against secession. It has worked safely and securely. It has proved popular as well as free, under all opposition. Its uniform and amply secured circulation has literally run out of employment all uncurrent money brokers and bank-note detectors, and it has so nearly extirpated the counterfeiting of paper money, as well as entirely equalized it in value from one end of the land to the other, that our people carry the National Bank notes about them without the trouble of looking at the place of issue or incurring the trouble of depositing them with their own banker by way of caution, discounts or explosions.

We presume that it is in no pronounced spirit of hostility to the National Banks that it has recently been proposed to revive State Bank circulation, which Congress wisely taxed out of competition with the National Currency. But the motive to this proposition probably grows out of the attempt of the Funding Bill to oppress the National Banks. We believe there is no ground for concern on this point. The banks will not be disturbed. They are much stronger than the architects of the Senate Funding Bill, and the system is too acceptable to the country, and its circulation far too popular with the masses, to be either overthrown or greatly weakened by Congress. The same remark is even more emphatically true of the Greenbacks, which this Funding Bill also proposes to contract or withdraw. The demand, therefore, for repealing the tax on State Bank circulation, is not only premature, but really without a substantial basis.

Black Doctors for Black Patients.

The medical gentlemen who are holding a convention at Washington have been much exercised in their minds concerning that everlasting object of contention, the negro. It appears that the said negro, not satisfied with the political privileges which he now enjoys, actually has the presumption to aspire to practice as a physician. What is the world coming to? The doctors at Washington evidently think that some tremendous convulsion is impending. Stupendous events have been predicted for some time past. Very awkward looking spots have been seen on that irregular orb, the sun. Eruptions are not uncommon in that luminary, but the phenomena lately discovered prove that something more than usual is taking place. Then, several planets have shown signs of a disposition to create a sensation in the universe. Altogether, the philosophers are thoroughly convinced that we are on the eve of terrible events. The attempt of colored doctors to place themselves on the same footing as their uncolored brethren seems to be regarded in Washington as the most serious portent of all.

We should be sorry to recommend that a sick white man should be compelled to call in the services of a black doctor. But if a negro wishes to consult a physician of his own hue, what harm is there in it? Why should he not be privileged to take a black draught from a black doctor? The practitioners of the regulation color will not allow any of their professional colleagues to meet negro doctors in consultation. Why not, if the patient desires it? Why treat the negro as if he were a homeopathist? Some allopathic practitioners are not afraid to meet even the followers of HAHNEMANN. It is not for us to say whether they are right or wrong—it is a purely professional point, which the profession must be allowed to decide in its own way. But, when negroes are willing to study in the regular schools and follow the regular system, it is carrying prejudice to a very extreme point to say, "You shall not be allowed to prescribe a dose of medicine, or at least not in consultation with us, unless you can change the color of your skin from black to white."

We cannot suppose that white doctors are afraid of the competition of negroes. In all probability, even a black man will always continue to prefer a white doctor. But there are not the times when restrictions can be imposed upon any class in obedience to mere prejudice. If negroes qualify themselves to practice medicine, the accident of their color ought not to be a perpetual barrier in their way. We want no white doctors there. But let them have as fair a chance as anybody else. There are plenty of undiscovered problems still left in medical science, and the general public can have no objection to see the negro try his hand at them.

Mr. CRAGIN thinks that Congress ought not to adjourn so early as the 4th of July, for if it does the Utah Polygamy bill will, in all probability, be defeated. And is that the only measure which would be endangered? What is to become of the bill to abolish the unjust system of allowing members of Congress to use the Post-office free of cost to themselves, but at a very considerable expense to the public? Moreover, is it at all likely, from present appearances, that the numerous financial questions pressing for settlement can be disposed of before the 4th of July? At the rate at which Congress has been moving since the 4th of December, the Greek Kalends would not be too distant a date to fix for the proper adjustment of public business.

We publish today a full report of Mr. GRAHAM'S speech for the defense, so far as it has gone, in the trial of DANIEL MCFARLAND. We regret to leave a part of our space with the text so prominently in the trial seems to be getting near the end. Its disappearance from the newspapers will probably not be regretted by the public, and perhaps not by the counsel engaged in the case, some of whom have succeeded in distinguishing themselves in a manner which they could scarcely have anticipated when they first addressed themselves to their duties. We can only hope that in two or three days more at the outside the eminent lawyers who still are left alive in the case will be able to retire upon their laurels—such as they are.

It is evident from the proceedings yesterday that the Senate is disposed to kill the bill abolishing the franking privilege by simply refusing to take it up. It is reported that there is a secret purpose to prevent a vote being taken, and thus the responsibility will be evaded of openly voting against it. We can assure the Senate that the plan will fail; the people are not to be so easily deceived, but will attach the responsibility where it belongs. The bill is one of the most popular measures before Congress, and if not passed this session an expression of public opinion will reach the Senate on the subject which will convince it that it is always unwise to resist indispensable reforms.

The New-York Observer, which is a sound religious paper, and not a mere vehicle for puffs, publishes a long article on the course taken by the Independent in relation to the McFarland affair. It says, among other things, "we hold that the rejection of the distinctive doctrines of the Gospel by the Independent, and the school it represents, is essentially the rejection of Christianity." In reply to this the Independent will put on its longest face, deplore the declining influence of the New-York Observer, and declare that it has dreadfully fallen off in character and quality of late. It will say in effect, "I can't deny that what you say is very true, but I will make faces at you, and pretend to be sorry that you are not so good as you were formerly." These infantile tactics do not seem to mend the case of the Independent, but they are easy to follow—and, moreover, they help to increase the air of insincerity which pervades the howling wilderness of the most unwieldy paper in the universe.

Of course a negotiation such as that for the annexation of San Domingo could not escape attack from the opponents of the Administration. The people of the Island with for union with this country—that fact is clearly established. For various good and sufficient reasons, it is desirable that they should be gratified. If at the same time we gain, what all naval authorities admit to be a necessity, a station for coaling and repairs in the West Indies, so much the better. The World objects to the transaction, and naturally, since it represents the Opposition side of politics. But the whole subject of this San Domingo Treaty has been sufficiently discussed for a popular understanding of the case, and the general opinion now is that the treaty is one proper to be made. The President and the Senate may be safely left to settle the subject, and any attempt to discredit the President's motives will not have much weight with the people.

The excited character of the debates in Dominion Parliament on the North-west question, shows that some members feel very sore about what has been done. This is hardly surprising. Ex-Gov. MACDOUGALL was made to retire from the Red River Territory under circumstances which reflected little credit for sagacity or foresight upon the Ministry which sent him. Of course he resents the conduct of any one who is even suspected of planning his discomfiture. Probably the most curious part of the matter, and the one which will strike outside observers the most, is the evident suspicion with which certain gentlemen are regarding each other. They seem in the condition of angry men who are compelled to keep secrets, and long to blurt them all out for the sake of making mischief. Mr. MACDOUGALL charged Mr. HOWE, the Secretary of State, with aggravating the Red River troubles, and he called for a Committee of Inquiry. There would be great propriety in the appointment of such a committee, and the facts it might bring to light would probably be interesting as well as instructive.

Mrs. BUSHNELL, who delivers lectures on the rights of children, is of opinion that her clients are the victims of a general despotism. Most people think that the case is rather the other way. The lady says, "the child should be permitted sovereignty of his person and freedom from invasion." The science of governing households is progressing. To render ill-behaved children still further the terror of the domestic circle, and to teach them that no one has any rights to meddle with their vicious propensities, seems likely to be the main result of Mrs. BUSHNELL'S method of "bringing up a child in the way he should go"—although probably that is not the specific object which she aims at accomplishing.

London, as well as our own City of New-York and a great many other capitals, finds what a hard task it is to put new wine into old bottles. London is just now embarrassed by the churches of what is called the old city proper. Before the great fire of 1666, it had one hundred of them, says the Pall Mall Gazette, but has now only fifty-six; and the difficulty consists in the fact that, as the dwelling-houses are being turned every year into warehouses, and the people go away, those churches, each with its full ecclesiastical staff, are without congregations, and the ministers preach to empty seats. At the same time, the rich bequests formerly made to them for the poor and needy of their parishes are misapplied. Many of the London journals agree that after a decay of the great old City, of course, transpire, yet it was generally felt that its effect was to decide upon the time when the movement shall take place. The Council meets again today.

and elevation would be sufficient for the Commissioners of the other parks, and there is now a bill before Parliament for the amalgamation of a difficulty in which, a good deal of old Parliamentary and court chicanery prevailed, very ably managed.

Mr. R. J. DILLON having withdrawn his refusal to act as Park Commissioner, the Sunday Mail very properly suggests that he should also withdraw his hostility to the existing plans of the Central Park. Mr. DILLON would have made the Park something totally different from what it is now, and if he renews his attempts to carry out his own ideas, the result will be divisions in the Board, if not annoyance to the public, who are perfectly well satisfied with the general design and construction of the Park. At this moment, fair Nature, with its spring bloom upon it, leaves us very few parks in the world which rival it in picturesqueness and beauty. Let any one who doubts the fact get up early some morning and wander about the "Ramble"—he will find it a better tonic than all the "bitters" ever yet concocted. The Mail truly says: "We which no patchwork or transformation of the most symmetrical piece of landscape gardening is to seek may venture."

The McFarland trial has created much discussion in regard to the manner of the Courts regulating their empaneling of juries, and even lawyers are beginning to recognize the necessity, as well as the duty, of disqualifying a man from being a juror because he is an intelligent reader of newspapers, and keeps himself informed on the current events of his time. Various reforms have been suggested, among the most original, if not the most practical of which is recommended by a prominent law journal. It gravely proposes to make the duties of jurors a profession, and to bring up a select class to fill the office. Such a profession would undoubtedly be a very profitable one, in these venal times, to the juror; but we doubt if the cause of justice would be always served.

The London Times made a very amusing blunder recently with regard to our Municipal politics. In its city article it gravely announced that "Erie shares were heavy on a decline of three-quarters caused by the announcement of the re-election of the friends of GOULD and FISK to the various Municipal offices in New-York—a fact which should serve as a further warning to all subscribers to American schemes, since the organization of the Democratic Party, by whom these gentlemen are supported, extends through every State of the Union." The news thus placed before the British public will cause a smile to beam upon the faces of Messrs. TWEED, SWEENEY & Co., to say nothing of the honest countenances of Messrs. FISK and JAY GOULD. The London Times has not made a much worse mistake than it announced that the whole of the United States debt was held in terminable annuities, which would expire of themselves in twenty years.

The Children of Capt. Williams, of the Oneida.

From the Boston Advertiser, May 6.

The following is an extract from a letter received from Mrs. S. W. A. GOODWIN, of Dixon, Ill., regarding the children of her brother, Capt. WILLIAMS, of the Oneida. The letter was written in answer to inquiries concerning the condition of the boys and their relatives, and will in the mean time, have contributed to swell the fund Mr. FOSSE is raising, now amounting to about $3,700:

"By his untimely death his three sons are left entirely dependent on relatives—a willing but inadequate source of supply. EDWARD WILLIAMS, the eldest, aged twelve, has been under my charge since the death of his mother, three years ago. While I live I shall do everything I can for my brother's boy; but my health is feeble, my means limited, and I shall have nothing to bequeath to any one. The second son, Master Elgin, is with his uncle, Dr. HENRY WILLIAMS, of Alton, Ill., an excellent guardian for the present, but he is in feeble health and without fortune. This boy must depend on a liberal education, on account of a severe and permanent injury to his right arm. The youngest, MARTIN HENRY, five years old, is with his maternal grandmother, Mrs. JAMES BROWN, of Bangor, Me. The family is poor and can do nothing for his education. They are fine intelligent children, well worthy of the protection of their country. God grant that some day they may render their country and the cause of humanity as great service as their father has done by his a valiant life and its heroic sacrifice for duty's sake."

Extensive Fire in Brooklyn—Loss Nearly Two Hundred Thousand Dollars.

Yesterday morning, about 10½ o'clock, a fire broke out in a large three-story brick building, at the corner of Nevins and East Bolte streets, occupied as a molding and planing-mill by Mr. J. S. LOCKER. The flames spread with great rapidity, and soon enveloped various adjoining buildings. In spite of the efforts of a well-organized body of the fire-brigade, the building first attacked was totally destroyed, and the others suffered very severely. The fire is said to have originated in the engine-room, from the overheating of the main shaft, which ignited the wooden flooring and rapidly communicated itself to the inflammable materials lying about. The various losses are stated as follows:

Mr. LOCKER estimates his loss on the building at $100,000; on stock, $50,000; insured for $8,000 in the Nassau, Commercial Exchange and others; loss on stock, $60,000; insured for $10,000 in out-of-town companies. JOHN CLYNE, lessee of the Lockers' mills, loss on building, at $800, on stock at $2,000; insured on the former for $1,500, in the Williamsburg City Company; stock not insured. THOMAS JORDAN, carpet-beater, puts loss on machinery at $1,500, on carpets, $1,000; no insurance. EDWARD ARMSTRONG estimates damage to residence at $250; no insurance. MICHAEL HOGAN states loss on house at $300; insured in the Penix Insurance Company for $1,200; on stable at $600; not insured.

The woodwork of Engine No. 7 caught fire and was rendered useless. In LOCKER' Mill about 100 men are employed, and they must be idle, all of whom will be thrown out of employment.

In proceeding to the fire the tender of Engine No. 10 came into collision with a street-car at the corner of Greene-avenue and Cumberland-street. The tender was overturned, and fell upon one of the firemen, named A. MALONE. He received very serious injuries, and was removed to the engine-house, where he was attended by Dr. LITTLE.

Another Nitro-Glycerine Accident—A Man Blown to Atoms.

A fearful nitro-glycerine explosion took place at the west end of the Midland Railroad Tunnel, at Wurtsboro, Sullivan County, yesterday afternoon. It appears that WARREN D. HANUM, one of the persons employed in blasting with glycerine, in company with a laborer named DAN CLAY, had loaded two holes and attached the wire of the battery to touch the blasts off. Only one shot went off, however, and the one loaded by HANUM having missed, they disconnected the wire from the battery and went to see what the trouble was. HANUM stooped down over the missed hole, and picked off some stone which fell from the other blast, and took hold of the wire of the exploder. He was just going to attach it to the leading wire of the battery to try it again, when it exploded, blowing him up in the air a distance of 300 feet, and throwing him fifty feet from the spot. His head was completely blown away, and his body horribly mangled. CLAY and fifty or sixty others of the laboring were on the bank, about five feet above the blast, and miraculously escaped uninjured. Had they been a few feet nearer they would all have met with a fearful death. A Coroner's inquest was held and a verdict rendered that no one was to blame. HANUM resided at Hannibal Co ter, N. Y.

WASHINGTON.

Protracted Waste of Time in the Senate—The Wilson Amendment Again Before Congress—Work in Committees—The Georgia Case—Instructions to Counsel.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—The Senate was in session nearly eight hours to-day; in all, fluttering on the House resolution, to adjourn on the 4th of July, and in discussing the Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. Time was shamefully wasted on the former, and a little progress was made on the latter. The votes and the tactics indicated very plainly that the majority of Senators are in favor of adjourning about the time mentioned, and, in two weeks when the subject will be again considered, a decided majority will probably be found in favor of the early adjournment. The Legislative and Executive Appropriation Bill numbers nearly sixty pages, twenty of which were passed on today. This was fair work, and the Bill will probably be finished about Wednesday. One of the most important amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole was that providing that in future the statistics at large, instead of being published in the newspapers and paid for, shall be issued in pamphlet form at an expense of not less than $50,000 per annum.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT.

The Senate Committee on the District of Columbia decided today against female suffrage in the District of Columbia, and so reported to the Senate. It is not very probable, however, that this will be the end of the movement even during the present session. Mr. Trumbull, and some one else, will endeavor to have the bill passed over the report of the Committee.

THE GEORGIA CASE.

The Senate Judiciary Committee further considered the Georgia case today, and examined Mr. D. C. Forney, the publisher of the Chronicle, and one or two of the other employes of that paper. It appeared in the evidence that Gov. Bullock paid $1,400 to this establishment, or persons connected with it as proprietors or editors, for services in the way of advertising and space occupied in other departments of the paper. The investigation has not yet closed; among the next witnesses to be examined is Gov. Bullock.

THE HOWARD INVESTIGATION.

The Howard-Wood investigation was also continued by the House Committee having charge of that subject, and Chas. Howard, a brother of the accused was examined.

REVENUE SEIZURES IN OHIO.

Information reached the Internal Revenue Bureau today that Wenze & Buehl's brewery, in the Seventh Ohio District, had been seized for fraud on the Government.

SPURIOUS BONDS REDEEMED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Affidavits were made today in the case of the New-York Bankers vs. The Government, growing out of the spurious $1,000 bonds redeemed by the Department some time ago. One of the deponents today was Mr. Moore, of the Register's office. Mr. Neal, Chief of the Division of Notes and Fractional Currency, and Mr. Wenzl, Cashier of the Treasurer's office, have been summoned for the same purpose. The case involves several hundred thousand dollars, and the question whether or not the Government is responsible for the issue of spurious money.

REVIVAL OF OUR SHIPPING INTERESTS.

The Bureau of Statistics is in daily receipt of a large number of applications for awards of official numbers and signal letters to merchant vessels. The following is a list of the applications received in one day, the 5th inst., representing an aggregate tonnage of 6,800, exhibiting a satisfactory revival of our shipping interests: Three large schooners from San Francisco; two large steamers from Salem, Ill.; one steamer from Philadelphia; one large steamer from Port Huron, Mich.; four large vessels from New-York; one large ship, three steamers and twenty others of different classes from Detroit, Mich.—making the total number received in the first five days of May, about sixty-five.

Foreign Trade of 1869 and 1870 Compared—Figures from the Bureau of Statistics.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Mr. Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, furnishes, from advance sheets, the following abstract of Monthly Report No. 7, Current Series, now nearly ready for distribution. This number exhibits the foreign trade of the United States for the month of January, 1870, and the seven months ended with the same, compared with the corresponding periods of 1868-9:

Periods.	Imports. Gold Values.	Imports. Merch'dise Values.	Dom. Exports. Mixed Values.	Re-exports. Foreign Goods.
Month ended Jan. 31, 1870	$27,000,000	$44,000,000	$38,000,000	$1,000,000
Month ended Jan. 31, 1869	29,117,000	38,000,000	38,000,000	1,000,000
Seven mos. ended Jan. 31, 1870	$81,000,000	$264,000,000	$1,000,000	$1,000,000
Seven mos. ended Jan. 31, 1869	108,000,000	256,000,000	1,000,000	10,000,000

Proportion of the foreign trade shipped in American and foreign vessels respectively during the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1870:

	Imports.	Exports.	Re-exports.
American vessels	$76,311,000	$105,160,000	$6,000,000
Foreign vessels	172,000,000	179,000,000	11,000,000
Total	$251,000,000	$284,000,000	$17,000,000

Percentages of total foreign trade carried in foreign vessels, 69.00.

Seven Months ended Jan. 31, 1869.

	Imports.	Exports.	Re-exports.
American vessels	163,000,000	170,000,000	6,000,000
Foreign vessels	134,000,000	144,000,000	5,000,000
Total	$256,000,000	$264,000,000	$10,000,000

The dutiable portion of the imports for the seven months are thus classified:

	Imports. Gold Values.	Imports. Merch'dise Values.	Dom. Exports. Mixed Values.	Re-exports. Foreign Goods.
Month ended Jan. 31, 1870	$27,000,000	$44,000,000	$38,000,000	$1,000,000
Month ended Jan. 31, 1869	29,117,000	38,000,000	38,000,000	1,000,000
Seven mos. ended Jan. 31, 1870	$81,000,000	$264,000,000	$1,000,000	$1,000,000
Seven mos. ended Jan. 31, 1869	108,000,000	256,000,000	1,000,000	10,000,000

The value of foreign merchandise remaining in the warehouses of the United States Jan. 31, 1870, was $[illegible], against $[illegible], Jan. 31, 1869.

Deducting the total value of domestic exports for the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1870, to specie values, we have $[illegible], which, being added to the amount of the re-exports for the same period, shows an excess of imports over exports of only $1,000,000. For the corresponding seven months ended Jan. 31, 1869, the excess of imports over exports was $[illegible]. For the details of each month, separately, see section "Monthly Summaries" in the report. Of the total gold value of the domestic exports for the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1870, $[illegible] consisted of merchandise, and $[illegible] of specie and bullion. For the corresponding period of the last fiscal year, the value of the merchandise exported is $[illegible], and that specie and bullion to $[illegible].

The following tables exhibit the number and tonnage of American and foreign vessels cleared in the foreign trade, entered into and cleared from the ports of the United States during the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1870, compared with the seven months ended Jan. 31, 1869:

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE...WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 5.

Mr. Summer from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, with an amendment, a bill to establish a uniform and impartial system of Public Schools in the District, and to secure equal rights in the said schools....The bills for an increase of the fees of United States Marshals and others of the Western District of Arkansas, and to provide for Special Terms of the Circuit Court in the Southern District of Ohio, were reported adversely....The bill to reduce the number of officers in the army of the United States, and for other purposes, was taken up, and a substitute on the same subject, proposed by the Military Committee, was made the special order for Tuesday next.

THE ADJOURNMENT QUESTION.

The House resolution for a final adjournment on July 4 coming up, motions to postpone and to extend the time to Aug. 1 were lost.

Mr. Sumner, at a few minutes before 1 o'clock, proceeded to speak on the subject, when Mr. Conkling expressed his regret that the minority had resorted to filibustering to delay action. Mr. Sumner disclaimed any such purpose. He thought, however, it was evident the subject could not be acted upon today. [Laughter.] He therefore moved to table the resolution, and called for the yeas and nays.

The vote resulted yeas 17, nays 28, when the morning hour expired, and the Appropriation bill came up.

Mr. Hamlin moved to suspend the present orders to dispose of the adjournment question. Agreed to—yeas 28, nays 28.

A protracted discussion ensued touching the merits of pending measures and the possibility of disposing of them within the limited time indicated by the adjournment resolutions.

Mr. Stewart, in a reason for taking up the bill to enforce the Fifteenth Amendment, said the Chinese had for twenty years been denied the protection of law. They were excluded from testifying in our courts and denied every other right, and the interposition of the power of the Government was needed to vindicate alike the Fifteenth Amendment and our treaty stipulations.

Mr. Cragin was apprehensive of the defeat of the Utah Polygamy bill, if so early a day as July 4 was fixed for adjournment. For the sake of the Republican Party he hoped that some remedy would be devised for the system of outrages inaugurated under the dictation of Brigham Young.

On motion of Mr. Chandler, the resolution was finally postponed until Friday, May 20, by yeas 27, nays 26.

THE APPROPRIATIONS.

At 2:20 o'clock the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was taken up, and various amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations, were agreed to.

The amendment to discontinue the publication of the laws in the newspapers was debated.

Mr. Williams favored a continuance of the system as the most efficient means of diffusing information as to what were the laws among the people.

Mr. Morton said, rather than abolish the system he would provide for a newspaper publication in every Congressional District. This might be expensive, but if it was important to enact laws it was equally important to give the people the means of finding out what they were.

Mr. Rose thought the public money could not be appropriated to better purpose than in disseminating among the people a knowledge of the laws that were to govern them.

Mr. Anthony said the publication of the laws in the newspapers was, in his judgment, an entire waste of public money. It cost the Government about $100,000 per year, and publication was not completed in most of the papers until long after the adjournment of the session of Congress, and often not until the next session. The condition of things which led to this practice was now greatly changed. All the laws of any consequence now appeared in the newspapers, in which people generally were kept well informed upon all details of important legislation in its various stages. He had thought it might be useful for the Secretary of State to make a compilation of such legislation of Congress as might be necessary for newspaper publication; but to spread before the country at public cost the details of money to Choctaws, Chickasaws and other Indians, and all other items of appropriation in every branch of public service, was so much waste of printers' ink. The Secretary of State and the Committee on Printing agreed with him in this view. After all, the publications were useful mainly to the legal profession. People generally applied, not to newspapers, but to lawyers, to know the law. His objection to the proposition, as suggested by Mr. Morton, was the cost to Government of the publication in every Congressional District, which would be increased by half a million dollars, perhaps a million.

Further remarks were made to the effect that the low price paid by Government was not sufficient to secure publication in the papers of large circulation, and consequently they appeared only in the smaller sheets.

The amendment was then agreed to by the Committee of the Whole, with the understanding that the yeas and nays would be taken when the bill came before the Senate.

Mr. Anthony gave notice of the amendment to abolish the Blue Book now published by the Government for gratuitous distribution.

At 4½ o'clock P. M. the Senate adjourned till Monday.

The Smith Ely Democratic Union Party—Will not Nominate—Protected Rights of Democrats Opposed to Tammany.

The Democratic Union Smith Ely Party announced their Assistant Aldermanic Conventions for last evening. Not a single nomination was, however, made. In a few instances a small number of persons assembled at the place of meeting, but no action was taken, and no programme agreed upon further than that nominations will be made next week. Barney Ely stated at Masonic Hall last evening that no Assistant Aldermanic Convention of the party would be held until after an attempt had been made to effect a fusion of the Waterbury, Smith Ely and Young Democracy parties.

Meetings of the Waterbury and Smith Ely parties were held last night at Masonic Hall. At the meeting of the former party Judge Brooks stated that today was to test the question "played out" or not. A committee was appointed to confer on arrangements with the Smith Ely and Young Democracy parties, who met at Masonic Hall today at 3 P. M., and agree upon a consistent plan of action, and upon a consistent plan of opposition to Tammany. A conference committee of twenty-two of the Smith Ely party met at Masonic Hall and arrived at no conclusion to meet the Waterbury and Young Democracy parties today. The Waterbury party appointed the following Committee of five to effect, if possible, a fusion with the Smith Ely party and the Young Democracy: E. V. Roosevelt, W. Walsh, R. G. Dunglas, J. W. Lane and J. Daly.

THE ELECTION LAWS.

Important Circular by the Secretary of State in Relation to the Recent Changes.

The Secretary of State has prepared the following circular letter to Inspectors, which will be sent to County Clerks for distribution during the present week:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, ALBANY, N. Y., May 6, 1870.

To Inspectors of Election:

The Legislature of 1870 passed several acts materially amending the Election laws of this State, which acts are herewith given, and to which your attention is respectfully invited, as an important feature in the approaching election in the State on the 17th instant, and the interval intervening, will be one short to give time for the proper preparation, publication and distribution of a revised edition of the Election laws.

Attention is also requested to the new registration, by street wards, the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage, &c., as passed in 1869, and amended in 1869 and 1869, commonly known as the "Rockaway law."

CHAPTER 90.

An act concerning elections other than for militia, and to repeal chapter 1, Laws of March, 1869, three-fifths being present.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. It shall be the duty of the inspectors of elections that the electors of this State shall present their names to be registered or enrolled with registrars of election, or other election officers, at any day prior to the day of election, in the city of New-York, and elsewhere, except as far as the same may apply to the City and County of New-York.

Sec. 2. Nothing in this act contained, shall be construed to repeal, alter or amend, any of the laws of New-York, or any other act, relating to elections in the City and County of New-York, passed April 6, 1870.

Sec. 3. This act shall take effect immediately.

It will be seen from the text, that the Registry law is repealed throughout the State, except in New-York City, where the special act of April 6, 1870, is alone applicable.

The repeal of the Registry law restores and makes in force general provisions of the Election law of 1869, as modified prior to April 15, 1869, (and as since amended,) alone operative throughout the State, except in New-York City, as aforesaid.

A compilation of the Election and Registry laws was published and distributed from this office during the year 1868.

The laws therein contained, from page 1 to page 60 inclusive, remain in full force, as well as the forms and instructions, from page 131 to page 175 inclusive, except as to qualifications and forms of polls for colored voters. The form of poll list required to be used at all elections may be found at page 135, and the form of statement of canvass at page 169. A special act to provide for the election of inspectors in the City of Brooklyn, was passed at the recent session of the Legislature; and the new charter of the City of Albany contains provision for the appointment of poll clerks.

Second: Your attention is also invited to the following acts (in addition to those contained in election pamphlet aforesaid,) passed during the session of 1870, in the order of their passage, to wit:

CHAPTER 124.

An act authorizing persons residing on Indian lands to vote in the annual election thereof. Passed April 19, 1870.

The people of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Any person residing on the lands of any tribe of Indians in this State, who is a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to vote in the election district nearest the place of residence of such person, in the same town, at any election held therein, whether such person be a member of such tribe or not; and such person or persons shall have the same right to register his or their names as voters, and shall possess the same right to vote in such election, as if he or they were residents therein.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

CHAPTER 359.

An act to amend the laws relating to elections. Passed April 27, 1870.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. All laws and parts of laws which direct or authorize the officers of elections, or any other officers of elections, to tender to or to require of a colored man offering to vote, whether when challenged or not challenged, any other oath than or different from that which they are required or required to tender to or to require of a white man in like case, are hereby repealed; and all laws or parts of laws which direct or require the registrars or inspectors of elections to enroll on the poll list, or any other list, or to put any questions or require any answers other than such as under like circumstances it is lawful to tender, administer, put to or require from a white person.

Sec. 2. It shall not be lawful for the registrars, inspectors, canvassers, or other officers of election, to reject the name from the register, or the vote of any colored person, on the ground that he or she has their duty to reject the name or the vote of a white man.

Sec. 3. Any registrar, inspector, or other officer of election offending against the provisions of the preceding section, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $500 and imprisonment for six months.

Sec. 4. This act shall take effect immediately.

It will be seen that the last of the foregoing acts makes the general oath contained at page 135 of the Election Law, published in 1868, applicable to colored voters, and the oath contained at page 146 is consequently no longer to be used.

The qual'ifications of all voters by the last-named act are made uniform, and as laid down at page 169 of the Election Laws herein referred to.

Respectfully yours,
HOMER A. NELSON, Secretary of State.

A Critic's Recompense.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "At last, after many years of patient expectation and more than one disappointment, Jules Janin—we had almost written the venerable Jules Janin—has attained the great object of a life devoted, with rare simplicity and singleness of purpose, to literary work and literary culture. In these latter days it is seldom that one meets with a man to whom the constant labor of his pen is at once a business and a pleasure, who writes to live and lives to write, and who, in writing and reading, finds the constant and only occupation and delight of a life exempt from vulgar ambition, content with a modest and lettered ease and the "high society" of his library. Such is this veteran man of letters whom the French Academy has so tardily elected to a vacant chair. For more than thirty years, undisturbed by revolutions, unshaken by political vicissitudes, undepressed by public calamity, Jules Janin has contributed to the Débats, Monday after Monday, a seven days' history of the Parisian stage; and the volumes in which he has collected these studies of the dramatic art and literature of his time will be at once the most faithful and the most agreeable record of a period in which Victor Hugo fought and won the battle of the romantic drama, and Mlle. Mars yielded her scepter to Rachel, the little Jewish girl, who had followed the wandering fortunes of a tambourine before her genius resumed for a moment the expiring lamp of the tragic muse at the national theater. Such is the fertility of that dramatic literature to which the English stage owes so many original adaptations, and such was the conscientiousness with which Jules Janin fulfilled his critical duties, that a Monday without a new piece, be it new vaudeville, or farce, (for he left nothing, however trivial, unnoticed,) or of some revival, was the rarest of occurrences. If the field of criticism lay fallow for the moment he was never at a loss for a text upon which to throw, like an embroidery, his most sparkling, abundant and various chat, strewed with quotations from his favorite Latin poets and French essayists, and occasionally, but not, perhaps, as spontaneously, from the Greek drama and philosophy, and of late years, with a decided preference, from Shakespeare. The loving zeal and fidelity with which Jules Janin has performed his literary and journalistic functions should be an example to those who treat dramatic criticism as an occupation for any Jack of all trades and master of none. In a country where dramatic authors are original adapters, there is most excuse for the low appreciation of the office of critic. Jules Janin has made poetry

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

Sales at the Stock Exchange—MAY 6, 1870.

FIRST BOARD—[illegible]

SECOND BOARD—12½ AND 2½ P. M.

SECOND BOARD—1 P. M.

NATIONAL STOCK EXCHANGE.

FRIDAY, May 6—P. M.

There was much steadiness in the Gold market today, sales 114¼ @ 114¼ @ 114¼ @ 114¼ ⅌ cent., closing 114¼ as against 114¼ last night. The Foreign Exchanges were advanced about ¼ ⅌ cent. on 60 days London early in the day, to 108¼ ⅌ cent., but a leading drawer coming into the market at 108¼ net short sight, which was relatively cheaper, the advance was scarcely supported. The gain in the Cotton receipts, noticed in our last report, over the receipts of last week was not maintained by the telegrams from the South last night, and the prospect is that the whole week will foot up a little under 60,000 bales, as against 50,564 bales last week. This Afternoon a story was started of frauds in shipping documents for Cotton from Galveston to Liverpool, had been discovered in Liverpool as connected with the failure some four or five weeks since in the Cotton trade at Galveston. On careful inquiry we have reason to state that no such fraud has occurred, although the story may have grown out of the protest in Liverpool of some of the Bills of the Galveston house referred to.

The sales for money were again very cheap and the supply easy today, notwithstanding the renewal last night (followed up today) of the buoyancy in the Railway speculation at the Stock Exchange. Loans on demand to the Brokers are quoted at 5⅝ ⅌ cent. Some of the Banks are lending their surplus supply of National Bank Notes to the Brokers as a concession of several days interest. The turn of the interior exchanges in favor of New-York has caused a temporary accumulation of National Bank Notes in the large Banks having correspondence with the South and West. Prime Merchant paper of short date is scarce on the Street at rates below Bank interest, and Bankers' 60-day acceptances have also measurably disappeared. The latter would be taken at 5⅝@6 ⅌ cent. per annum.

The Treasury paid out $600,000 on May Interest today, and took in $478,000 for Customs.

The Public Funds were ⅛@¼ ⅌ cent. firmer than last night through the day, but the movement was not of a very speculative nature, the principal business being done in 5-20s of 1867 at 113¾ ⅌ cent.

In the Railway market was concentrated the chief interest of the day. The transactions were large, and the buoyancy in prices very decided. The Lake Shore Stock touched par about 1 o'clock; then fell back to 99¼@99¾, and again, subsequently, sold at par, and up to 100¼ ⅌ cent. New-York Central Stock and Scrip, and Rock Island, were also strong. The North-west Stocks advanced on Thursday's sale, and the St. Paul's attracted more attention than for a week past, the sales being unusually active in the Afternoon at an advance of one ⅌ cent. The Miscellaneous Shares were higher on Canton, Cumberland Coal, the Express Stocks and Mariposa Preferred. The new Bonds of Tennessee fell back to 54¼ ⅌ cent.

After the late Boards the following quotations were made, as compared with Thursday night. In the Public Funds the 5-20s of 1862 were firmer; Gold steady; Exchange 109¼ ⅌ cent.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE

Meeting at the St. Denis Hotel—Three Advertisements—Remarkable Statistics, Other Tea Scenes—Curious Combination—Tobacco—"Cheaper Wines."

The advertisement of the St. Denis Hotel asserts that "all the delicacies of the season" will be provided for the guests. In order to fulfill this promise, the reading-room of the establishment was given up to the ladies yesterday afternoon, as a suitable locality for the monthly meeting of the local Suffrage Association. The rear window commanded a fine view of clothes hanging up to dry, insignia of the slavery of woman at the present day, while within, spittoons were provided and stationed in convenient places, insignia of woman's freedom in the good times coming. About half an hour after the time advertised Mrs. BLAKE called the twenty ladies and seven reporters present to order, and the meeting was opened with a reading of the minutes of the last meeting by Mrs. CROSBY. They were adopted unanimously, together with a resolution of sympathy with Mrs. Dr. SUSAN SMITH, of Philadelphia, "or any other woman."

Miss ANNIGNY, who, like Paddy Dunlar, "had just come out of the West," was invited to speak. She began by stating that she never had paid the income tax and she never would. If men wanted to put SUSAN B. in jail she would go. She had nothing attractive except a silk dress given to her by ANNA DICKINSON. She doubted if they could take that. It was time for women to protest strongly against the payment of the income tax. The inconsistency of taxation without representation should be brought before the Courts, and it would be. She had just returned from her first lecture tour, and found a strong feeling in the West in favor of the enfranchisement of women. Whenever she put the question as to whether women should vote, she discovered that all of the audience that voted voted yes. She thought that there was probably the same feeling in New-York if she (Miss A.) did not want to believe the West was so far ahead in the Empire State. She alluded to the Suffrage bill before the House of Commons, and had been told that the passing of a bill to its second reading there was equivalent to passing it to its third reading here. After all, the great need was to have the question thoroughly debated. Again, she did not want the suffrage unless it came through an amendment to the Federal Constitution. She did not want to have to claim the right to vote from low and ignorant men.

Mrs. WILBOUR, who had just entered, arrayed "in purple and fine linen," protested against appealing to men.

Miss ANTHONY said that the refusal of the ballot to women by the white men was the result of an ignorance and barbarism which they were trying to enlighten, and "they were getting light mighty fast."

Miss HAYES, of Philadelphia, a lady bearing a strong resemblance to Miss DICKINSON, thought the question was not a woman question, but a human question. Not to mistake a lady for a "strong-minded" woman was to underrate her mental qualifications. She thought we would never have nobler men than the noble mothers; therefore the standard of womanhood should be elevated. She added that they "courted notoriety," and she believed that misrepresentation would do them good.

Mrs. BLAKE spoke on the subject of having women as census-takers. It might be the only way of ascertaining a woman's true age. The Superintendent who excluded them from the office and acted in accordance with the law did right, but the law was oppressive. She offered the following resolution.

Whereas, By the recent action of the Superintendent of the Census, it becomes evident that, according to the act of May 23, 1850, women are not eligible to the office of takers of the census; therefore

Resolved, That this Association protests against this construction as unjust and oppressive, and earnestly calls for its repeal.

The resolution was adopted. Miss ANTHONY objected that the Government could not appoint clerks to those who could not pay anything back. Referring to the fact that some women were postmasters in their native villages, she claimed that only those who had worked for GRANT or his father obtained offices. She proposed that they should hold the ballot before 1872 and win. She had all share of the lucrative offices with good work and full pay. She was what they wanted. The Democracy of Illinois would put the woman suffrage plank in their next platform, and the Republicans were "trembling in their boots" for fear the Democracy would do what they did not dare to do. She told the Democracy how to manage the Republicans.

Mrs. SUMMERBY—You show your colors too much for a politician.

Miss ANTHONY—Oh no; I only can tell them what to do.

Miss ELDA FRANCES LOUGHRY stated that the strong, manly women, with brains and intellect wanted the ballot. They were the women who dared to say what the world ought to be, and not what it is. According to her classification they comprised about all the women in existence. Because they wore a petticoat instead of a pair of trousers, they had no vote. Woman was naturally virtuous, but what could she do when starvation on twenty-five cents a day was at her door, especially if she had a fine form and a pretty face? Women who were happy did not want to vote. They had everything they wanted. She ridiculed the idea of woman's wishing a protector. Men were to blame for women's frivolous life. Yet women could not get along with such men or women without them. She (Miss L.) wanted a field to float their ideas. The lady closed by stating that she had not come dressed for the reporters, but would appear next time in her-necked dress, short sleeves, &c., for their benefit. She wore a red shawl, maroon-colored over-skirt, and black under-skirt, with a small saucer-shaped hat, surmounted by a few flowers, setting on some dark curls.

It was announced that the anniversary meeting would begin on Tuesday morning at Apollo Hall. Hon. R. G. INGERSOLL, Mrs. COLE, Miss THERESA COUSINS, Mrs. STANTON and others will speak.

Mrs. BLAKE objected to the inference that only unhappy women wanted the ballot, and stated that all the anti-slavery men were not slaves.

Miss ANTHONY thought that those who were kept into canary-birds in gilt wire cages did not want to vote. She (Mrs. B.) feared that if a woman was ill-treated by her husband or brothers she would be converted. As long as they were well treated by their male relations they did not want the suffrage. Some discussion ensued on this point, after which, with a vote of thanks to the proprietor of the hotel, the meeting adjourned.

Fourteenth Ward Colored Republican Association.

The members of the Fourteenth Ward Colored Republican Association met last evening in the basement of Shiloh Church, corner of Prince and Marion streets. The Association was organized but a short time since and held its first meeting on the 29th of April, when WM. FREEMAN was elected permanent President, and BENJAMIN MEYERS Secretary. It numbers 300 members, the greater portion of whom attended the second weekly meeting last evening. Hon. M. FITCH delivered a lengthy address, making an earnest exhortation to avoid the political crimes of the Democrats, such as repeating, &c., and pointing out the advantages of adhering faithfully to the Republican cause. He said that he did not see why this State should not have an African Lieutenant-Governor in the course of time. Indeed, he prophesied the election of a colored Assemblyman ere long. He extolled the good features in the character of colored people, winding up with an appeal to all colored voters to work for the overthrow of Tammany and "their natural enemies—Irish Democratic politicians."

WM. BONEZ, of the Third Assembly District Union Republican Association, and Dr. RENNY added a few remarks. The meeting then adjourned till Thursday evening next.

Republican County Convention—Organizing Opposition to Tammany.

The Republican County Convention of New-York met last evening, corner of Twenty-second-street and Broadway, Hon. JOHN COCHRANE being elected as temporary Chairman. Some slight conflict arose as to who should be permanent Chairman, which resulted in the election of JOHN S. GRIDLEY, the former President, in opposition to WILLIAM A. DARLING. A motion made by Mr. STUART to appoint a Committee to confer with the opponents of Tammany in relation to the approaching nomination, after a long discussion, was finally carried, and the Committee appointed. The members of the Committee were announced by the chair, after which the meeting adjourned.

Affray with Serious Results.

A fracas occurred last evening in the rum hole of Assistant Alderman JOHN HARRISON, No. 220 Wooster-street, corner of Amity-street. One MICHAEL MECKLER, a shoe-maker living at No. 46 Amity-street, received a message that HARRISON desired to see him and went to the saloon. Upon arriving there he found he had been deceived, and instead of HARRISON he found there one CHAS. GOLDEN and a man named he he named BEND, both of whom assaulted him, and the former of whom struck him a violent blow on the head with a bottle, inflicting a severe wound over the eye. The Police were called, but before Officer HAN, of the Fifteenth Precinct, who responded, arrived, both the ruffians had escaped. The wounded man was conveyed to his home, where he was attended by a neighboring physician, who found his hurts to be of a severe but not dangerous character. Capt. HAYNES is on the lookout for GOLDEN, who is well known to the Police, and will probably be arrested.

Another affray occurred yesterday at the Ashburton Hotel, corner of Portlock-street and Sixth-avenue. EMPALLO COLLEMORE, the colored cook of the house, had a quarrel with CHRISTOPHER KUNZE, the head waiter, which culminated in blows, and KUNZE having recourse to the only weapon at hand, struck COLLEMORE on the head with a glass, inflicting a gashing cut. The wounded man retired, and was not seen after the occurrence, but it is expected that he will be arrested this morning by Officer FOWLER, of the Fifteenth Ward Police Court.

WORKING MEN'S UNION.

Sympathy with French Working Men—The Eight-hour Law and Public Works.

The Working Men's Union of this City held a semi-monthly meeting at No. 107 Bowery last evening, Mr. JAMES B. POMEY presiding. Several trades were reported as being in a satisfactory state, and among them those of the painters, stair-builders and bakers. A communication from the Arbeiter Union was received, containing an invitation to their festival on the 3d inst. An address, prepared by Gen. CLEMENS, tendering sympathy to the working men of France, was read and taken as a political document. A communication from the iron-moulders of Peekskill was read, stating that their strike still continued. A report was made that there was no want of bricklayers safety at present, although the bosses there had advertised to the contrary. Mr. JOHN KRUGER was elected Second Vice-President, to fill a vacancy, and installed. The Secretary reported that the Corresponding Secretary draw up an address of sympathy to the working men of France on eight-hour law, chiefly miners and iron-workers. It was also resolved that the Corresponding Secretary ask the Governor to appoint a member of the Union one of the Committee for examining the State Prison contracts, and that the Corresponding Secretary ask the Governor whether the eight-hour law was in force as far as concerned the erection of public buildings. Mr. P. PAPIN, a humanitarian pioneer, lately from France, was introduced and addressed the meeting on colonization on the part of working men. The meeting then adjourned.

Base-Ball—Union vs. Mutual.

Notwithstanding the threatening aspect of the weather yesterday afternoon, and the rain which fell during the first portion of the game, an unusually large concourse of spectators assembled at the Union Grounds to witness the second match between the Unions, of Morrisania, and the Mutuals, of New-York. The result of the last contest had awakened quite a lively interest in the present game. Up to the end of the fourth inning the Unions led the score, after which the Mutuals put in MARTIN as pitcher, to whose "slows" must be attributed the result of the game, which ended by giving only 2 runs on the last five innings to their opponents. The most intense interest centered in the last inning, when the Mutuals had 1 to tie and 2 to win, and finally succeeded in scoring a run, amid much applause:

The occasion was one of great interest, as it was an official recognition by the head of this diocese of the colored communicants of the Episcopal Church, and naturally attracted a very large congregation notwithstanding the inclemency of the evening.

He testified to having seen the box packed in his father's shop by a man who was a stranger to him. Deputy Marshal CROWLEY gave the substance of a conversation with the prisoner at the time of his arrest, in which the latter acknowledged that he endeavored to keep the real contents of the box from A. KOHN, who insured it for him, besides claiming that it was prepared by a strange man who was then at the South.

JULIUS HENNETT, aged thirty-five years, and a native of Prussia, was arrested yesterday by Detective BENNETT, of the Central office, on a charge of larceny. LONG ISLAND.

The ordinance of the Health Board in relation to driving cattle in the streets of the City are very oppressive to the Long Island butchers. The distance from Bull's head to Ninety-second-street Ferry, where all the cattle for Long Island are crossed, is four blocks and only four houses are passed on the route. By the regulation of the Board cattle cannot be driven through the streets after 7 A. M., and as it is impossible for butchers residing on Long Island who depend upon these yards for their supply of meats to be in the City early enough to purchase their supplies and be off before 7 A. M., they are either compelled to wait till the next morning at great expense, or employ what are termed in slang parlance "blockade-runners," who, for 50 per head, spite of Dickinson Policemen and City laws, will deliver the cattle on the ferry-boat at 8, 9, 10 and even 12 o'clock.

The body of an aged German woman was found floating in the river at the foot of Fifth-street, Hoboken, yesterday. The body was clad in mourning, and a small amount of money was found in a pocket-book. No marks of violence were found upon the body, and its appearance indicated that it had not been in the water more than twenty-four hours.

THE SUPPOSED TRIAL.

this inquiry; if so, then the act was still the act of a voluntary agent, but the intelligence of the body without the concurrence of a mind directing it.

Even supposing the defendant to have intended to kill the deceased, in conversation concerning antecedent to his being shot, on Nov. 24, 1869, if that act (the shooting on that day) was perpetrated by the defendant while in a state of insanity, it would still exempt him from legal responsibility.

To make the threats evidence of malice for any purpose, they would have to be uttered while the defendant was in a sane state of mind.

To connect them with the shooting of Nov. 24, 1869, the jury must find that they were uttered maliciously, seriously, with the intent to execute them when and as they imported, by the defendant, in a state of sanity, and that that intending occurred in pursuance of those threats.

Under any circumstances, the jury must find when the threats and act in question were the result of a sane mind.

Upon the point of the seriousness of the threats, the jury are to consider the fact that those to whom they were made neither notified the deceased of them nor took any steps to have the defendant arrested for them, in pursuance of law.

If the jury believe that the threats were unmeaning, and were uttered in a state of excitement or anger, without any intention of executing them, and wholly as the result of passion, they are not to be regarded in determining the character of the homicide in question.

As to the alleged shooting of the deceased by the defendant on March 12, 1867, that cannot be taken by the jury as evidence of malice, unless the prosecution have satisfied them by proof beyond peradventure that that shooting was felonious.

To do this, the proof must be such as would induce the jury to find a verdict against the defendant if he was on trial under an indictment for that act.

If the jury believe, from all the evidence in the case, that that act was committed by the defendant in a state of insanity, they are to discard it from their consideration altogether.

The defendant's counsel have not prosecuted the act of March 12, 1867, that it was not deemed to be a crime at the time of its commission.

In passing upon the question whether that act was or not criminal, the jury are to take into consideration the difficulty they may suppose

FINANCIAL.

INDIANAPOLIS, BLOOMINGTON AND WESTERN RAILWAY

SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD LOAN.

The bonds are in denominations of $500 each, secured by a first mortgage on 200 miles of road, from Indianapolis, the largest city and most important railroad center in the State of Indiana, to the City of Pekin, in Illinois.

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY MILES of the line are now IN FULL OPERATION, equipped with new first-class rolling stock, and already EARNING MUCH MORE THAN THE INTEREST ON THE WHOLE ISSUE OF BONDS. The balance, thirty-five miles, is being rapidly constructed, is nearly all graded, and UNDER CONTRACT TO BE FINISHED IN JUNE NEXT.

There are thirty-six depots on the line, LOCATED IN CITIES AND TOWNS THAT CONTAIN, IN THE AGGREGATE, A POPULATION OF ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY THOUSAND, averaging over 200 to each square mile, within a radius of half a mile of the track; and WITHIN TWENTY MILES OF THE TRACK THERE IS A POPULATION OF ABOUT SIX HUNDRED THOUSAND.

It passes through the counties of Marion, Hendricks, Montgomery, Fountain, Warren and Vermillion, in the State of Indiana, and Vermilion, Champaign, De Witt, Piatt, McLean and Tazewell Counties, in Illinois, on the line of the old emigrant State road, which was laid out in the best portion of those States before the time of railroads, was then the main line of Western travel, and consequently became more thickly settled than other sections of the West, as the numerous cities, large villages, and products of those counties testify.

Besides the large agricultural productions of this section the manufacturing interest is very extensive in the large towns, and is rapidly increasing.

The coal mines at Danville on this line are extensively and profitably worked, and FURNISH BUSINESS FOR OVER THREE HUNDRED COAL CARS on this line at present, and MORE THAN TWICE THAT NUMBER WILL BE REQUIRED to carry coal on completion of the remaining link.

From the present earnings on 170 miles it is safe to assume that the LOCAL BUSINESS ALONE WILL BE AMPLE NOT ONLY TO PAY THE BONDED DEBT, BUT LARGE DIVIDENDS ON THE STOCK.

In addition to the population and wealth of the country, and all that is necessary to support a first-class road and make it a profitable investment through local traffic, it forms a grand central trunk line FOR THROUGH BUSINESS, NOT SURPASSED BY ANY ROAD OF EQUAL LENGTH IN THE WEST.

At Indianapolis it connects by main lines with the cities of Columbus, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Cincinnati—and with the Pennsylvania Central, Baltimore and Ohio, Chesapeake and Ohio, and other important railroad lines. At Pekin, the western terminus, connections are made with Peoria, Quincy, Keokuk, Burlington and Omaha. At Bloomington with the Illinois Central Road, which runs north-west 600 miles to Fort Dodge, Iowa. A very large business will be done with this line. At Danville it connects by rail with Toledo on Lake Erie. A map will show all these to be very important connections in making through lines over this route.

THE LOAN IS PLACED BEYOND ANY CONTINGENCY BY THE PRESENT EARNINGS FROM LOCAL TRAFFIC ON ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY MILES, which must necessarily be doubled when the trains run through.

THE BONDS ARE CONVERTIBLE at the option of the holder into stock at par at any time, which adds greatly to their value. They may be registered at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, if desired.

Coupons payable April and October, free of tax.

Total issue $3,000,000—$1,600,000 of which are placed in trust with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company to redeem and cancel $1,000,000 bonds issued to the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad, now merged into this road, making the loan only $2,000,000, OVER HALF OF WHICH HAS BEEN SOLD IN EUROPE AND THIS MARKET. The balance we offer at 90 AND ACCRUED INTEREST. At this low price the Bonds, being so amply secured, will be quickly marketed.

We have been thoroughly posted in regard to the road from the start, have closely inspected it from time to time during construction, and being familiar with the wealth and resources of the country, the responsibility and integrity of the officers and directors of the Company, and the present earnings of the road, it is with pleasure that WE RECOMMEND THE BONDS AS ONE OF THE CHEAPEST AND SAFEST INVESTMENTS IN THE MARKET, sure of a high standard among the best railroad securities in the country.

All marketable securities received in exchange at market rates. Bonds delivered to all points FREE OF EXPRESS CHARGES.

First Mortgage Bonds of the Chicago, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad Company.

These bonds are, part of the first and only issue of the Company for $1,000,000, covering its entire property, and are at the rate of $16,700 per mile. Of the whole issue there are but $600,000 now already placed, having but $400,000 to be sold. They are 7 per cent. coupon bonds due in 1897, interest payable 1st January and July in New-York. The road is in operation, 211 miles being leased to the Illinois Central, 50 miles to Shore and Michigan Southern to Peru, where it connects with the Toledo, Wabash and Western and the Peru and Indianapolis Road. It runs through one of the finest sections of Indiana, and makes a connecting link in the best through line from Chicago to Indianapolis, and thence to Cincinnati and Louisville.

We confidently offer these bonds as a safe investment to investors, AS THE NET EARNINGS OF THE ROAD FROM THE OPENING HAVE SHOWN IN EXCESS OF THE INTEREST ON ITS BONDED DEBT, AND ARE CONSTANTLY INCREASING. Besides it is destined to extend the road to Lake Michigan at New Buffalo or Michigan City the coming season, which will also greatly increase its earnings.
